Combined AP & UPI

SAN FRANCISCO — Bank accounts will remain the private business of Americans at least until later this month when a federal court hearing will be held on a law which would open accounts to government scrutiny.

U.S. District Judge William T. Sweigert yesterday issued a temporary restraining order to keep the Bank Secrecy Act from taking effect Sunday.

The order covers all banks in the U.S. and will remain in effect until a three-judge panel opens hearings on the law July 20.

The American Civil Liberties Union, the California Bankers' Association and Democratic Congressional candidate Fortney Stark, of Walnut Creek, a banker, had sought the restraining order.

They argued that the act, Public Law 91-508, violates the U.S. Constitution.

Congress enacted the law in 1970 to open bank customer secrets to federal government scrutiny for the reported purpose of catching underworld financial manipulators, tax cheaters and persons sending money to Swiss banks or international drug peddlers.

The law was to have gone into effect in May 1971 but was delayed by the government until Sunday.

Sweigert said his order does not stop banks from keeping all records for possible future disclosure to the government.

But, he said, "neither the government which has itself already postponed implementation of this legislation for nearly two years since its enactment, nor the public interests could possibly be injured by a mere further few weeks delay."

"The effect of the order will be to protect all depositor accounts from government scrutiny," said Charles Marson, American Civil Liberties Union legal director.

But Asst. U.S. Atty. John Youngquist argued the order would "impede the process of justice."

Contending the ACLU and banks were tardy in filing, Youngquist called the action a tactical move to "unfairly pressure" the court and government into "hasty and unnecessary action."

The Treasury Department in Washington had no comment.

Sweigert, U.S. District Judge William G. East and 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal of Judge Oliver D. Hamlin will conduct the hearing on whether to make the restraining order permanent.

Critics of the act charge that almost every American could be affected and that it would permit deep invasions of privacy by the government.

Top-Level Meetings Of Farmers, Sellers

Administration Sets Price, Inflation Parley

WASHINGTON (UPI) —Administration officials will meet with farm leaders and major food chain executives next week to discuss the price picture and the broad outlook for fighting inflation, the Treasury announced today.

A spokesman said about 25 food chain leaders will confer with Cabinet officials at the Treasury starting at 3 p.m. EDT Wednesday. A somewhat larger group representing farmers, producers and farm suppliers have been invited in at 11 a.m. Thursday.

The meetings "will aid officials preparing a report on the food price problem the President has requested by July 10," the Treasury spokesman said.

Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz, chairman of the Cost of Living Council, and Donald Rumsfeld, the council director, said in a joint telegram to the farm and food leaders that the meetings were "for a discussion of the recent rise in food prices."

Shultz said in a statement he hopes for "a frank and open exchange of information on cost trends, prospects for future food prices, food supply developments and the recent actions and rulings of the Cost of Living Council."

Among those scheduled to attend the sessions, along with Shultz and Rumsfeld, are officials of the Agriculture and Commerce Departments; the President's consumer affairs adviser, Mrs. Virginia Knauer; Mrs. Marina Whitman of the Council of Economic Advisers, and officials of the Pay Board and Price Commission.

President Nixon called his top economic advisers to the White House Friday to order them to begin jawboning with all segments of the food industry. The President Monday removed import quotas on meat to try to drive prices down and Thursday put cost controls on previously exempt vegetables, eggs and other raw agricultural products.

In other economic developments Friday, the Defense De-

Heat, Smog Relief In Sight

Bay Area weather forecasters predicted relief today from sweltering heat and irritating smog levels throughout Marin and Southern Sonoma.

Temperatures soared yesterday in the region with the temperature reportedly reaching 114 in the Chileno Valley at 3 p.m. — a record by two degrees — 107 in Novato, 106 in Terra Linda, 104 in Woodacre, 98 in Petaluma and 90 in Sausalito.

The Novato high came within three degrees of the highest temperature recorded in the city since the fire department began keeping records 14 years ago.

The heat, without the usual cooling offshore breezes, had fire officials worried yesterday.

Marin County Fire Chief Richard D. Pedroli increased patrols of the Santa Venetia and Mount Tamalpais areas, described as two of the county's fire danger zones.

He urged extreme caution among Fourth of July weekenders in use of campsites and cigarettes. Pedroli also reminded Marinites that use or possession of fireworks in the county is illegal.

The weather outlook for July Fourth weekend in the Bay Area is fair through Sunday, with temperatures reaching the low 80's and light winds.

Yesterday's hot air mass was caused by falling atmospheric pressure along the Central Cali-

Assessment Rolls Set New Record

By JEFF GREER

Marin County property assessment rolls for 1972-73 set a record total — but environmental problems kept the rolls from being even larger, County Assessor Bert W. Broemmel announced yesterday.

Assessed valuation countywide is $729,813,614, a net increase of 7 per cent, or nearly $47.5 million, over last fiscal year's roll of $682,335,857.

The total includes only property assessed by Broemmel's staff. The assessment of public utility property will be released later this month by the state. Broemmel predicted it may be down slightly from last year because the state is gradually decreasing assessement percentages on utility holdings.

The county, cities and districts set tax rates based on the total rolls, both locally and state assessed.

Broemmel said his department reevaluated about 30,000 individual parcels of property throughout Marin, "and not all went up, by any means."

The assessments reflected shrinking market value of lands where new construction has been halted by a ban on sewer hookups, restrictions on use of tidelands, and building moratoriums to permit open space or other planning.

Broemmel said the City of Tiburon building moratorium, for instance, resulted in a $169,000 cut in the potential assess-

Festivities in Ross, beginning at 10 a.m., will include music, dance puppet shows and storytelling. Kim Hobson, Miss California of 1972, will appear at radio station KTIM's booth, along with Francesca Cresci, Miss Cable Car of 1972; Lynn Baker, Miss Marin of 1971, and Cathy Mullowney, newly crowned Maid of Marin.

Activities on Tuesday will include fireworks displays in Sausalito and in Petaluma at the Sonoma-Marin Fairgrounds. The combined Larkspur-Corte Madera celebration will begin Monday at 6 p.m. with family picnics in Corte Madera Town Park. A parade is set through both towns at 3 p.m. Tuesday.

In Kentfield, a crafts and open market will be held in the College of Marin parking lot from 11 a.m. to dusk tomorrow through Tuesday. Mill Valley will celebrate with music and booths in Lytton Square Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Marinwood will feature a pancake breakfast at the community center at 11:30 a.m. and watermelon feed at 4 p.m. Petaluma's traditional chicken barbecue will begin at 11 a.m. at McNear Park. Games, contests and an old-fashioned hootenanny will begin at the fairgrounds at 6:30 p.m. as a prelude to the fireworks.

An air fair benefiting cystic fibrosis research, which opened today, will continue tomorrow from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Gnoss Field, outside Novato.

'Insurgents' Deny Daley Demo Convention Seat

WASHINGTON (UPI) —Richard J. Daley, who worked himself up through the party ranks to powerful Mayor of Chicago and one of the Democratic party's last big bosses, has been denied a seat at this year's convention. (See picture, page 2.)

But the 71-to-61 vote Friday to seat 59 insurgents instead of a 59 member Daley group, was not the last act in the battle between party reformers and the old line boss.

Sen. George S. McGovern, the immediate victor in the action, getting 41 delegates from the new Chicago group, may not be the victor in the long run.

Tony Podesta, a McGovern strategist who engaged in the extremely heavy lobbying leading up to the crucial vote, feared there might be an adverse effect in November.

Referring to fears Daley may not take an active part in the campaign if McGovern is nominated, Podesta said, "If he sits on his hands sure it's going to hurt."

Rep. Roman Pucinski, one of six congressmen unseated by the vote, confirmed Podesta's fear, saying, "Many of our precinct leaders, I believe, will take a walk ... if we are not seated in that convention the prospects of President Nixon in Illinois are considerab ly increased."

William Singer, Chicago alderman who led the fight to unseat the Daley delegation,. said he did not think the party action would have any effect on the Democrat's chances in Illinois in November.

If the Committee's action is upheld on the convention floor in Miami Beach and in federal courts, it would be the first time since 1956 that Daley has not led the Illinois delegation to the convention.

The climatic vote followed a day of intensive lobbying. Daley supporters hostled with the opposition to buttonhole Committee members. The noise level was so high at the rear of the Sheraton-Park Hotel ballroom that Mrs. Patricia Roberts Harris, the Committee Chairwoman, was forced to gavel repeatedly for silence.

Daley backers also took out a full-page ad in Friday's editions of the Washington Post saying a vote against his properly elected delegation would repudiate the choice of 900,000 Chicago voters.

McGovern Plea On Return Of Delegates

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Sen. George S. McGovern has carried his appeal for help in regaining control of the California delegation to all Democratic National Convention delegates while some House members have expressed fear of his candidacy.

McGovern, his anger unabated over Thursday's decision by the Democratic Credentials Committee to strip him of more than 150 delegates he won in the June 6 California primary, sent lettars to each convention delegate Friday asking for help in reversing the action.

"For the sake of the Democratic party and the traditions that have made it great, I urge you to join with us in repudiating this cynical and destructive manipulation," McGovern's letter said.

"What would we tell the hundreds of thousands of young volunteers, many of whom had almost given up on trying to work within the system, if they saw the same old crude politics undoing all their hard-earned results?" he asked.

Rick Sterns, McGovern's chief political pollster, claimed that the South Dakota lawmaker already appeared to have more than enough support to get the committee ruling overturned on the convention floor. He said many supporters of Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey and Edmund S. Muskie would join McGoven delegates in the battle.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, who rarely enters inter-party squabbles, called the committee decision "unfair." He charged that a "backroom coalition" engineered the move and said it was "totally inimical to the Democratic institutions we cherish so much." Sen. William

More War Funds Asked

WASHINGTON (UPI) —President Nixon says another $2.8 billion, a 70 per cent increase over projected costs, will be needed to finance the Vietnamese war for the next year.

The President made his request in a message to Congress Friday asking for $2.25 billion to be amended to the pending $77 billion defense budget for the fiscal year beginning today.

The request would have been $543 million higher, the President said, except for savings on the Safeguard missile system as a result of the arms limitations agreements signed May 26 in Moscow.

Nixon said increased Communist activity since March 30 and the need to increase the U.S. air responses to the assaults were chief reasons for the necessity of additional funds.

The Pentagon disclosed Friday that a petroleum pipeline was being built between Hanoi and the Chinese border to circumvent the U.S. blockade of North Vietnamese harbors.

Defense Department spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said the pipeline is about 80 per cent complete and could be in operation as early as next week.

Pentagon experts estimated that the pipeline would be able to supply North Vietnam with up to 1,100 metric tons of fuel per day. These experts said, however, that even without the pipeline North Vietnam had enough oil stockpiles to last "several months at the current rate of usage."

Nixon estimated at a news conference Thursday that the cost of the war would be reduced to about $4 billion in fiscal 1973 unless there was increased Communist offensive activity.

But the request for the supplemental appropriation indicated that the war costs would now be about $6.8 billion compared with $7 billion in fiscal 1972, which ended Friday.

Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird said three weeks ago that as much as $5 billion more may be needed if the communists launch more offensives. A Pentagon source said Friday the funds requested by Nixon would probably finance operations through September.

'Worst-Ever' Inland Oil Spill Fought

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Cleanup crews began laying a blanket of straw and other absorbent material along 32 miles of the Schuylkill River today in an attempt to sop up what was possibly "the worst inland oil spill in the history of the United States."

The spillage of six million gallons of oil reached acute proportions nearly a week after Tropical Storm Agnes punished Pennsylvania with record flooding that left 44 known dead.

Philadelphia escaped most of Agnes' immediate destruction but it was the same killer storm that now threatened to pollute the water supplies of a five-county region, including the nation's fourth largest city.

The Coast Guard termed it "the worst inland oil spill in the history of the United States" and visiting federal officials Friday confirmed the assessment.

The muck spilled into the river when rains from Agnes forced it over the walls of two huge lagoons belonging to Berks Associates, a chemical firm 35 miles upstream at Douglassville.

Quang Tri Pinched And Softened Up

SAIGON (UPI) — American warplanes softened up Communist defenses in Quang Tri Province today and South Vietnamese ground troops closed in on the provincial capital from two sides.

Carrier-based American fighter-bombers resumed their strikes in the Hanoi-Haiphong area of North Vietnam for the first time since weather halted the operations four days ago, the U.S. command said today.

Saigon marines fought North Vietnamese forces seven miles northeast of Quang Tri City and reported killing 34 Communists while suffering only one man wounded, the allied command said.

Two battalions of South Vietnamese paratroopers pushed to the Communist-held provincial capital from the south, reaching the outskirts of the city with the help of U.S. airpower.

In the air war, clearing weather Friday enabled U.S. jets to strike deep into North Vietnam, hitting the Kep airfield 30 miles northeast of Hanoi and 55 miles southwest of the Chinese bgrder.

Pilots in the carrier-based jets also reported destroying three surface-to-air missile (SAM) launchers and damaging two missile sites and a radar unit 33 miles southeast of the North Vietnamese capital.

Pilots using television-guided bombs reported destroying part of the Thanh Ne highway bridge 31 miles southwest of Haiaphong, as well as destroying all or part of four other rail and highway bridges to the south, the U.S. command said.

In addition, U.S. B52 bombers based in Guam and Thailand flew three missions against North Vietnam in a 24-hour period ending today, the command said, all of them against Communist supply areas within 55 miles of the border between North and South Vietnam.

Military spokesmen said North Vietnamese countered the drive into Quang Tri by pushing South Vietnamese troops out of a base camp 12 miles southwest of Hue and capturing at least three government positions near the provincial capital of Song Be.

The U.S. command, meanwhile, reported five American reconnaissance planes crashed or were shot down in the war during the week with two crewmen reported missing.

Reagan Inks Bill Allowing V.D. Courses

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Declaring venereal disease is a "major" health problem in California, Gov. Ronald Reagan has signed legislation designed to combat the spread of the disease by setting up VD education courses in public schools.

Two bills were signed Friday by the governor. One by Assemblywoman March K. Fong, D-Oakland, would allow the education courses to be taught in the schools: Another measure by Assemblyman E. Richard Barnes, R-San Diego, appropriates $238,000 for the program.

"The spread of venereal disease has become one of the major health problems in California," Reagan said in a prepared statement.

He said he believed the legislation would have a "major" impact on the problem, and VD will eventually be reduced to a much lower level."

During committee hearings and debate on her proposal, Mrs. Fong said there was a "growing epidemic" of VD in California and that the disease was particularly prevalent among young persons.

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

2 Killed In Belfast

BELFAST (UPI) — Gunmen killed two men, wounded three others and shot at British troops today after militant Protestants erected protest barricades across Northern Ireland.

The slain men raised to three the number killed since a cease-fire halted most violence five days ago and to 396 the toll since Catholic-Protestant violence brought British troops into Northern Ireland in August, 1969.

Police said gunmen in a passing car killed one man on the Protestant side of a "peace line" separating Catholic and Protestant districts in Belfast. The body of the second was found shot in the head in a garden inside an area barricaded by Protestants.

Cruising gunmen wounded two other men in Belfast and one in Lurgan.

No Agreement

PRAGUE (UPI) — West Germany and Czechoslovakia failed to agree on an improvement of relations because of a 34-year-old Nazi pact which lost legal validity long ago, West German and Czechoslovak officials said today.

A Czechoslovak government source said "the 1938 Munich pact was the only stumbling block" in contact talks between the two neighboring countries which ended yesterday without an agreement that would lead to concrete negotiations to normalize their long strained relations.

CTK, the official news agency, said the talks between Paul Frank, a state secretary in the Bonn foreign ministry, and Czechoslovak Deputy Foreign Minister Jiri Goetz, were held "in an open and good atmosphere."

Frank explained that "Czechoslovakia insists the pact should be declared invalid from the very beginning."

Experts explained that West Germany, by this stand, wanted to protect the legal rights of three million former residents of the Sudetenland now living in West Germany.

Big Diamond Sale

LONDON (UPI) — The Star of Sierra Leone, currently the world's largest uncut diamond and the third largest ever found, goes on sale later this month. It will take a bid of at least $2.4 million to buy it.

The star, big as a hen's egg and weighing half a pound, went on public display for the first time Friday at the Sierra Leone high commission office in London.

"Whoever buys it will cut it up and the pieces will no doubt end up as jewelry for lovely ladies like Liz Taylor and Jackie Onassis," said Davidson Nicol, high commissioner for Sierra Leone. "Traditionally stones like this were given to kings and queens."

A workman at Sierra Leone's Yengema mine found the 968.9 carat star last Valentine's Day.

Summit Extension

SIMLA, India (UPI) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and Pakistani President Wulfikar Ali Bhutto today extended their current summit talks one day and Mrs. Gandhi reportedly held out the possibility more summit level negotiations could be held in Pakistan.

The current summit talks were originally scheduled to end today, but officials now say they will wind up Sunday night, with Bhutto returning to Pakistan Monday.

Mrs. Gandhi met privately with Pakistani journalists today. One of the Pakistani newsman later quoted her as saying she had received no formal invitation for further talks in Pakistan, but "your president has mentioned it." The newsman said Mrs. Gandhi answered in the affirmative when asked if such talks would be possible.

'Definitely A Bomb'

SAIGON (UPI) — Investigators have "definitely" established that a bomb blew apart a Cathay Pacific Airways Convair 880 commercial jetliner over South Vietnam June 15, aviation sources said today. All 81 passengers were killed.

The sources said police have a suspect in the case "under surveillance," but have made no arrests.

The Bangkok-Hong Kong flight blew up over the central highlands 230 miles north of Saigon.

Sources close to Cathay Pacific, which is based in Hong Kong, said the airline's investigators believe that a bomb was placed on the plane to enable the suspect to collect flight insurance when it crashed.

Duke Arrested

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. (UPI) —Angier Biddle Duke, a former protocol officer in the Eisenhower and Kennedy Administrations and former ambassador to El Salvador, was arrested early today in this exclusive eastern Long Island summer community and charged with drunk driving, police reported.

Corte Madera Adds 6 Men To Fire Department

The Corte Madera Town Council authorized six additional firemen requested by the fire department last night but made trims in other departmental expenditues and elsewhere in the town's proposed spending program for 1972-73.

The additional manpower, coupled with a 2 per cent pay raise for new and old firemen, increases total salaries to be paid firemen this fiscal year by $66,110, to $137,081.

The total fire department budget approved by councilmen last night just about doubles that of the just-passed fiscal year — $162,732, as compared to $85,274.

About 30 persons attended the budget hearing, but there was little discussion from the audience.

Councilmen were generally in agreement with the request for six firemen, which grew out of a special study of the fire department; although Mayor Holmes S. Norville and Councilman Edward W. Colthurst balked at hiring all the men at once.

Norville noted that the town would save $21,000 if only three firemen were authorized now and the other three authorized in six months.

Colthurst said training would be easier for a group of three rather than six.

However, they were outvoted 3-2 by councilmen who were members of the special committee that recommended bolstered fire services following a fast-spreading residential fire in the community last year.

The six new firemen will raise the department's total to 11, including the fire chief and assistant chief.

Norville said an eligibility list has been established for the new jobs and it is likely that the six will be on the payroll by next week.

Councilmen, meanwhile, trimmed the total fire department budget request from $174,403 to $162,732.

They cut $6,000 requested for the extension of a fire line on Manzanita Lane on the grounds it was the obligation of the water district, not the fire department.

They also eliminated $1,300 in equipment maintenance, reduced a request for $1,166 to buy at-home radio warning devices for the six new firemen to $200 for only one device, cut out $1,150 for a fire hydrant at All Faiths Church and $800 for one by the town library.

They whittled from $4,838 to $3,150 a request for new fire hose and voted to defer temporarily a bid for $800 for conferences and training.

Councilmen also tackled the street portion of the public works department budget, trimming the $150,277 total to $134,002.

Eliminated was $18,400 for proposed resurfacing of Tunnel Lane, $975 for a saw and $900 for materials and supplies.

Councilmen then added $4,000 for the reestablishment of a program to eliminate curb ponds.

The council will consider recreation department spending requests at its next budget session July 6.

Compulsory Chapel Is Ruled Out

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The U.S. Court of Appeals has ruled that compulsory chapel at the Military, Naval and Air Force Academies violates the constitutional freedom of religion.

Chief Judge David L. Bazelon and Judge Harold Leventhal, in writing the majority opinion, said the first amendment guarantees "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

The 2-1 decision handed down Friday reversed a ruling made in the U.S. District Court July 31, 1970. The District Court held that mandatory chapel attendance for midshipmen and cadets was constitutional.

The appellate court acted on a class action appeal filed in January, 1970 on behalf of all midshipmen at the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., and cadets at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., and the U.S. Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs, Colo.

Regulations at the academies requires attendance at Protestant, Catholic or Jewish services each Sunday.

In a dissenting opinion, Judge George E. McKinnon said that "the importance of the attendance regulations to the academies' training program is of the highest order, to my mind.

"It is in the great importance that I place on this portion of the curricula, which is directed to building the character of academy graduates and qualifying them to understand the spiritual qualities of the men under their command, that I part company with my colleagues. I consider such training to be more important and necessary than they do."

The majority opinion said the Defense Department and the heads of the academies "have made no showing that chapel attendance requirements are the best or the only means to impart to officers some familiarity with religion and its effects on our soldiers."

Midwives Defined

LONDON (AP) — The Royal College of Midwives, advertising for a staff replacement in a national newspaper, described the job as "an assistant secretary-labor relations officer."

Mitchell Quits Nixon In Favor Of Martha

WASHINGTON (UPI) — John N. Mitchell resigned today as President Nixon's re-election campaign director in order to devote more time to his wife and family.

The resignation came just a week after the volatile wife of the former attorney general said she would leave him unless he quit politics.

Francis L. Dale, chairman of the Committee to Re-Elect the President, said Mitchell would continue to work for the committee in an "advisory capacity."

"We have accepted John Mitchell's resignation with deep regret," said Committee Chairman Francis L. Dale, "But we are fortunate in the availability of a most distinguished new successor. The new campaign director will be Clark MacGregor."

MacGregor is currently counsel to the President for congressional relations.

Prior to his appointment by President Nixon in January, 1971, MacGregor was a member of the House of Representatives for 10 years from the third district of Minnesota.

Wallace Will Leave Hospital On Friday

SILVER SPRING, Md. (UPI) —George C. Wallace will leave Holy Cross Hospital next Friday for the first time since he was gunned down in a May 15 assassination attempt. He will fly to the Democratic National Convention in Miami Beach in a special plane provided by President Nixon.

Wallace will spend 30 minutes in Montgomery, Ala. en route and make a planeside speech from a platform at the airport, press aide Elvin Stanton said Friday.

The Alabama stopover will allow Wallace to regain his powers as that state's Governor, Lt. Gov. Jere Beasley has been acting in Wallace's place. Under the Alabama Constitution, Wallace had to technically surrender the governor's chair because he was out of the state for more than 20 straight days.

Once in Miami Beach, Wallace will host a reception on the evening of July 8th for all convention delegates. "He wants to know the delegates and for them to meet him," said Billy Joe Camp, another press spokesman.

Camp said the governor's schedule in Miami Beach will be "flexible" depending upon his physical condition. He has been allocated 450 rooms at two hotels.

Unemployment Is Unchanged In Major Cities

WASHINGTON (UPI) —The Labor Department reports its list of major cities with "substantial" unemployment of 6 per cent or more remained unchanged at 54 in June. But the number of smaller areas with joblessness that high went up by six to an all-time high of 844.

This marked the sixteenth consecutive month that at least one-third of the 150 largest metropolitan areas in the nation were on the 6 per cent or more unemployment list. A high point of 65 was reached last October.

While the major areas on the list have been on a down ward trend since then, the number of smaller areas with substantial joblessness has continued upward, suggesting a shifting of unemployment from metropolitan areas to smaller cities and towns.

Death Sentence Ban Lauded

WASHINGTON (UPI) —The House Black Caucus says the Supreme Court ban on some death sentences is "humane and historic."

The 13 black members of the House said in a statement Friday that the decision was of particular importance to Negroes, noting nearly 58 per cent of the 600 on death row were non-white.

The caucus said there should be further court rulings, or possibly congressional action, to eliminate the death penalty on all counts.

MISSING MISSING

MARY ANN PESCE ANITA M. LUCHESSA

The parents of two teenage coeds from Fresno State College are appealing for aid from anyone that may have seen their daughters who disappeared in the Bay Area near Berkeley on May 7, 1972. Neither girl has been heard from since.

Anita M. Luchessa and Mary Ann Pesce, roommates at Fresno State, were last seen May 7, as they hitchhiked on Ashby Ave., in Berkeley.

They were visiting friends in Berkeley, then tried to get a ride to San Francisco, Menlo Park and Stanford University. They were possibly to return to Fresno down the coast highway through Big Sur. All police and private agencies have found no trace of either teenager.

Miss Luchessa is 5 feet 1 inch tall, 105 pounds, brown shoulder length hair with partial sun bleaching and brown eyes. She was wearing gray and white stripe bib type overalls, red "T" shirt with a red nylon jacket.

Miss Pesce is 5 feet 1 inch tall, with shoulder length brown hair cut in a shag style, 110 pounds with blue eyes. She was wearing a maroon or purple colored sweater, faded blue jeans and hiking boots. She also had a purple felt hat.

The girls had a back pack with orange or red knapsack and a gray-brown sleeping bag.

A $500.00 reward is offered for the location of the girls. All responses will be kept strictly confidential.

Anyone who may have seen the girls are asked to contact Bob Heitman Investigations, area code 209 526-5040 (Collect). The girls are asked to call home to assure their parents they are safe. Miss Luchessa's mother is seriously ill.

Less Riders, But Ferry Income Up

Increasing the cash fare on the ferryboat Golden Gate caused a slight dip in riders, but a sharp gain in revenue in May, Gen. Mgr. Dale W. Luehring told Golden Gate Bridge District directors yesterday.

He said patronage was off 2.4 per cent compared to May 1971. However, the cash fare increase from 50 to 75 cents boosted ferryboat revenue for the month to $51,401 compared to $43,004 a year ago.

June figures will show about a 4.5 per cent dip from the same month in 1971, he predicted.

Bus ridership is rising, Luehring said. District buses carried 428,284 passengers in May, compared with 383,399 in April and 402,965 in March. Of the total, 324,803 riders crossed the bridge and the rest rode within Marin and Sonoma counties.

Second Challenge To County Nudity Law

A second suit challenging the Marin County nudity ordinance was filed yesterday in Marin Superior Court on behalf of four men facing misdemeanor charges under the ordinance in Marin Municipal Court.

The suit filed by deputy public defender Gaile O'Connor parallels one filed earlier this week and will be combined with it at a hearing Thursday when the lower court must either stop prosecution under the ordinance or show cause why it shouldn't.

Both suits argue the nudity ordinance prohibiting exposure of "private parts" or female breasts on public lands is unconstitutional on four grounds.

They claim state law has preempted the nudity field, the ordinance is too vague and broad, it denies women equal protection under the law since men can legally expose their breasts, and that it violates the right of nudists to express themselves.

"Nude bathers, like other sunbathers, generally swim, play ball or frisbee or visit with friends, and otherwise engage in innocuous frolic on the beach," the deputy public defender said.

She said the nudists express "a certain uninhibited idea about the basic wholesomeness of the human body."

She represents Michael Steven Katz, Michael Phillip Kaufman, Robert Stanley Acker and Albert Douglas Shusko. They were arrested March 6 on a fairly secluded stretch of Muir Beach.

The first suit filed Monday is on behalf of eight persons arrested in April and May on the same beach.

Boyle Will Run

NEW YORK (UPI)—United Mine Workers President W. A. "Tony" Boyle said today he will run for the union's presidency again despite being sentenced earlier this week to five years in jail on a federal conspiracy conviction.

Antisecret Ruling To Be Appealed

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — A deputy city attorney said yesterday the city will appeal a court ruling that said a committee of a public agency must conform to the state's antisecret meeting act when it convenes.

Edmind A. Bacigalupi said the city would file an appeal by Monday in a bid to overturn a decision last week by Superior Court Judge Joseph Karesh.

Karesh, in a suit brought by a resident who was barred from a committee meeting of the San Francisco Human Rights Commission, said the state's Ralph M. Brown Act applies to committees of public agencies even when they meet with less than a quorum of the parent board.

The appeal will be filed with the appellate division of superior court.

Retirement Approved

WASHINGTON (UPI) —Gen. William C. Westmoreland's retirement as a four-star general was approved Friday by the Senate.

Holiday Buses Doubled

Eager to cut down holiday auto traffic on the Golden Gate Bridge, span directors yesterday unanimously approved doubling the number of weekend and holiday tourist buses to Point Reyes National Seashore and added new West Marin routes.

Beginning today, tourists will be able to ride Golden Gate Bridge District buses from San Francisco or San Rafael that will loop past Samuel P. Taylor and Mount Tamalpais state parks, Stinson Beach and Bolinas, as well as the seashore.

Two buses daily will leave San Rafael and four will run from San Anselmo to Inverness via Fairfax and Olema. Four buses daily will run from San Francisco's Transit Terminal and Civic Center to Bolinas. Two buses a day will run each way between Bolinas and Inverness. Scheduleu are available from the Golden Gate Bridge District bus offices in San Rafael.

The district board authorized spending about $4,264 for experimental operation of the extra runs on the 22 Saturdays, Sundays and holidays between today and Labor Day.

Director Peter Tamaras, vice chairman of the bridge district transportation committee, urged, "We've got to get the cars off the bridge on weekends."

Gen. Mgr. Dale W. Luehring said the Marin Transit District probably would not be asked to share in the cost because in theory none of the passengers would be local. He also pointed out that the county transit district is sponsoring free shuttle bus service within the seashore in a test of the popularity of public transit with visitors to Marin's recreation areas.

The Golden Gate Bridge District board also:

COST FORMULA — Set a meeting for 9:30 a.m. July 26 of the joint finance-auditing committee with the Marin Transit District and bridge district staff to discuss revision of the formula determining the county district's share of bus service costs. Under the present formula, Luehring reported, the county district could be asked to pay up to twice what it can raise with the maximum allowed property tax of 5 cents per $100 assessed valuation.

SCHEDULES — Approved new bus routes to Northgate Industrial Park and the Lucky Drive area in Corte Madera and Larkspur effective Aug. 1, and cutting back to hourly midday runs in the Santa Venetia and Peacock Gap areas. New schedules will be available this month, Luehring said. The revisions will save the district about $172,935 a year.

PAY — Authorized 3.2 per cent cost-of-living increases for about 50 district administrative staff and other employees whose pay raises are not still in negotiation. It also approved a resolution making retroactive to today any pay raises negotiated with other workers during July.

INSURANCE — Voted to cancel the district's $31 million earthquake insurance policy for the span at an annual premium of $209,700, and authorized staff to attend a national bridge and toll road conference on insurance problems in Boston next month.

JOBS — Approved creation of 16 new positions and elimination of one.

TERMINAL — Authorized staff to call for bids on construction of the district's main bus shops and parking area in San Rafael, and extended the district's lease on the nearby temporary facility pending completion of the project in mid-1973.

SANTA ROSA — Exercised the district's option to buy 5.5 acres now under lease for the district's Santa Rosa bus facility at a cost of $175,000.

SAUSALITO — Authorized Thomas M. Jenkins, the district's attorney, to continue negotiations for a portion of the Arques property in North Sausalito for commuter parking for ferryboat riders.

FERRYBOATS — Referred bids from three shipbuilders for three new ferries and operations committee for study. Low firm was Campbell Industries of San Diego, which offered to build one craft for $4,654,000 or three for $12,043,000.

Union Men Fined For U.C. Sit-In

BERKELEY (UPI) —Nine labor union members were fined $100 each and given suspended 15-day jail sentences yesterday for a sit-in May 31 in the office of University of California president Charles J. Hitch.

They included Richard Groulx, head of the Alameda County Central Council, and Lamar Childers, head of the Alameda County Building Trades Council.

The nine pleaded guilty after Municipal Judge George Brun informed them in advance of what the penalty would be.

NEW PARK GETS EARLY VISITORS

Dedication rites for San Rafael's new Maria B. Freitas Memorial Park won't be held until 10 a.m. next Saturday, but youngsters already are finding the serene waters of the park's wading pool a delightful way to beat the heat. The $150,000 park at Montecillo Road near Trellis Drive features a waterfall as well as the wading pool, plus picnic facilities. Playground equipment still is being installed. Band music, folk dancing and speeches highlight the dedication.

Prison Guard Strike Threat Held Imminent

SACRAMENTO (UPI) —The state's correctional officers were urged Friday by two senators to exercise patience while efforts are pressed to bring their salaries in line with those paid to highway patrolmen.

"I hope we can get a little patience here," Sen. George Moscone, D-San Francisco, told a news conference held amidst reports of growing discontent by prison guards over what they consider salary inequities.

Moscone said he was told by Teamsters Union officials that a strike threat was "immenent" at several prisons in the state, including Folsom, San Quentin and Soledad.

"The threat is imminent, not just a rumor," Moscone said at the news conference, where he appeared with Sen. John Najedly, R-Walnut Creek.

But Moe Camacho, president of the California Correctional Officers Association, said his organization was not planning a strike.

"Our organization has never, and is not now authorizing or sanctioning an officer strike, sick-in or other form of work stoppage or slowdown," said Camacho in a prepared statement.

He said directors of CCOA would meet in Sacramento July 10 to discuss action to be taken to improve the salary schedule of correctional officers.

Moscone said the prison officers were "rebuffed" Wednesday by the state Personnel Board "in approving only a 7.5 per cent pay increase."

Nejedly, chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Penal Reform, said the Personnel Board was operating on the "misconception that correctional officers are just jailers or guards."

He said their responsibilities go "far beyond that" and they should be compensated accordingly.

"We must convince the (Reagan) administration of the need to respond more appropriately to the needs of these people," Nejedly said.

CHANGING OF THE GUARD

As the state flag flapped in a hot summer wind, part of a 17-man force comprising Tiburon's new police department stood at attention yesterday in ceremonies outside city hall. The new department, headed by former Novato police Lt. Maurice D. Lafferty, took over from the Marin County Sheriff's Department, which had been keeping the peace in the city since it was incorporated eight years ago. During yesterday's ceremony, which included an exchange of brisk salutes, the department's new dispatcher took two calls — a child was missing and someone had caught a shoplifter.

Assessment Rolls Reach A New High

ment roll within the city — about $17,000 tax income for the city. Still, the town's total assessment roll jumped 16.2 per cent over last fiscal year.

Broemmel said $2,870,465 was lost to the county assessment rolls by governmental takeover of private property, mostly in the Point Reyes National Seashore area.

The Regional Water Quality Control Board's ban on sewer connections in Southern and Central Marin cost $904,825 in assessed valuation and the California Supreme Court decision in the Marks-Whitney case trimmed the rolls by $1,006,194 because of the resulting restrictions on tidelands development.

Broemmel said total loss to the assessment roll from the various causes was $4,950,484, or .7 per cent of the total local roll.

Both homeowner and business inventory exemptions increased, but veterans' exemptions continued to shrink, the assessor reported.

Homeowners, each entitled to claim a $750 exemption, accounted for a $29,441,850 reduction in the total roll, up 5.3 per cent from last year. Businessmen, entitled to deduct 30 per cent of their inventories on hand on the March lien date, accounted for $4,729,544 — 11.2 per cent more than last year.

Broemmel said the inventory exemption gain showed that businessmen in Marin were keeping larger stocks of merchandise on hand than last year.

The state reimburses local agencies for taxes lost due to the homeowner and inventory exemptions. Veterans' exemptions, which are not reimbursed, declined 2.7 per cent. Only 900 veterans qualified, Broemmel reported.

Broemmel said final figures had not been tallied on the year's new agricultural preserve contracts. He predicted they would have an impact of about a .5 per cent reduction on the total roll, the same as last year.

The value of improvements is playing an increasingly important roll in the total assessments, now 55 per cent as compared to 54 per cent last year. Broemmel said the gain resulted mainly from major construction at Northgate. Assessments on land represented only 40.4 per cent of the total roll, down 1.5 per cent from last year.

Broemmel noted that after exemptions, Marin's homeowners will foot about 66 per cent of the tax levies computed from the assessment rolls. Before exemptions, residential property represented 72 per cent of the county's total valuation, up from 70 per cent last year and 65 per cent in 1963-64. The nonresidential property share of the total continued to decrease.

After the Marin County Board of Supervisors formally adopted a $47.3 million budget on June 23, County Auditor-Controller Michael Mitchell predicted the eventual 1972-73 property tax rate would be $2.72 per $100 assessed valuation — based on a predicted 6 per cent rise in the total assessment rolls. The actual tax rates cannot be computed until the state delivers the public utility rolls.

All of Marin's cities showed assessment roll gains over last year, ranging from only 1.1 per cent in Sausalito to Tiburon's 16.2 per cent. Fairfax, which last year had the smallest gain, this year had the second largest jump — 15.3 per cent — due to extensive reevaluations, Broemmel said.

Other cities' percentage gains were Belvedere, 11.5; Corte Madera, 3.1; Larkspur, 9.7; Mill Valley, 10.5; Novato, 9.5; Ross, 2.0; San Anselmo, 1.2, and San Rafael, 8.0.

The 11 cities showed a total gain in assessed valuation of 8 per cent, to $500,478,065. The valuation of unincorporated areas rose 6.8 per cent to $299,335,549.

Only one school district showed a decrease in total assessment roll, but it was a whopping 10.6 per cent for the Bolinas-Stinson district. The drop was caused when the 1,700-acre George P. Leonard property was taken off the rolls for park expansion, Broemmel said.

He listed the other districts and their percentage gains in assessed valuation as:

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL DISTRICTS — Dixie, 15.5; Fairfax, 13.5; Kentfield, 8.4; Laguna Joint, 4.2; Lagunitas, 2.9; Larkspur, 2.3; Lincoln, 7.4; Mill Valley, 8.7; Nicasio, 11.1; Reed, 11.5; Ross, 3.3; San Anselmo, 1.3; San Rafael, 4.6; Sausalito, .9; Union Joint, .3.

HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICTS — San Rafael, 8.1; Tamalpais, 6.0; Petaluma (within Marin County), 5.1

UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICTS — Novato, 8.7; Shoreline, 3.2

COLLEGE DISTRICTS — Marin Community, 6.9; Sonoma Junior (within Marin County), 5.1.

City gross assessed valuations before homeowner, veteran and business inventory deductions — in other words the figure from which the cities compute their tax rates — are:

Belvedere, $20,383,371; Corte Madera, $30,865,381; Fairfax, $18,900,822; Larkspur, $38,902,133; Mill Valley, $48,305,614; Novato, $72,293,180; Ross, $12,681,592; San Anselmo, $33,500,568; San Rafael, $154,766,614; Sausalito, $37,276,274 and Tiburon, $32,602,516.

School district valuations, before exemptions, are:

ELEMENTARY — Bolinas-Stinson, $11,148,485; Dixie, $71,800,236; Fairfax, $22,264,377; Kentfield, $50,791,274; Laguna Joint, $1,407,119; Lagunitas, $8,056,037; Larkspur, $44,179,030; Lincoln, $15,445,839; Mill Valley, $91,923,551; Nicasio, $3,294,355; Reed, $68,135,892; Ross, $14,789,629; San Anselmo, $41,844,356; San Rafael, $136,810,327; Sausalito, $41,923,122, and Union, $414,421.

HIGH SCHOOL — San Rafael, $208,610,562; Tamalpais, $398,350,108; Petaluma (Marin County portion), $3,366,379.

UNIFIED — Novato, $100,066,008; Shoreline, $19,420,556.

COLLEGE — Marin, $726,447,235; Sonoma (portion in Marin) $3,366,379.

Broemmel said the filing period for protesting assessments will open Monday and run through the month. In most years, the assessment appeals board makes much less than 1 per cent of a change in the total local rolls.

County assessed valuations are computed at 25 per cent of the property's "fair market value" for the area.

The assessor reported his office no longer is reappraising Marin properties on a cyclical basis, which used to mean that any given parcel might be reassured only every second or third year. The county computer now keeps track of all real estate sales, and any area where there is much sales activity is likely to be reassessed each year.

Last year's assessment roll showed a record 13.6 per cent increase over the previous year — but technically the increase was only 4.9 per cent. Broemmel recalled that before fiscal 1971-72, the county had set the assessments at 23 per cent of market value, but the state ordered all counties to assess at 25 per cent.

partment said it would cut its purchases of beef, lamb, fish, pork and poultry by 10 per cent to increase supplies for consumers and Pay Board Chairman George H. Boldt revealed that a review of the 5.5 per cent wage increase guideline has begun.

But there was depressing news from the Agriculture Department, which reported that farm prices rose 1.5 per cent in the month ending June 15. The prices farmers receive often foreshadow changes in wholesale and retail food prices.

The Agriculture Department said beef cattle prices set a record high and hog prices continued to rise from record lows last winter. Potatoes increased 17 per cent and fresh fruits 12 per cent from May 15.

The Defense Department said it will reduce its inventory of meats by 50 per cent for at least the next four months with the aim of forcing supermarket meat prices down.

Boldt would not disclose whether the wage guidelines were going up or down.

Florida Miss At The Top Of Professional Bowling

She Was Born To Be Champ

By GAY PAULEY

NEW YORK (UPI)—Paula Sperber, 21, was born to be a champion in sports.

Ever since the leggy blonde from Miami can remember, she competed in any sport— swimming, paddle ball, golf, touch football, baseball, softball, bowling. "Our family always had some sport going," she said.

When Miss Sperber settled down to excel at one, it was bowling. First she racked up championships in Miami at the end of the 1960s, took the Florida Open in 1971, then went on to win the U.S. Open in 1971 and the title "Woman Bowler of the Year," which the U.S. Bowling Writers Association handed her.

SHE JOINED the Professional Women Bowlers Association tour in 1970 and it wasn't long until AMF Bowling Products spotted her talents, signed her to a long-term contract for personal appearances, clinics and exhibition games, and turned her earnings from mere pin money into a lucrative $15,000 a year with expenses. She earns extras for her tournament apperances.

"Lucrative yes," sha said of her AMF affiliation, "but I've really been travelling so much I've had no time to plan investing. I just sock it in the bank."

Travel time consumed has included two trips to Japan, where she said bowling is a whole new craze. "You'd see people at bowling places at six in the morning," she said. "I taught clinics in sign language."

BACK HERE to resume domestic appearances, the bowling champ sat down to talk about the sport.

"There are an estimated 52 million bowlers," she said. "About 50 per cent are women. We have more women bowling than in tennis and golf combined. It's a family sport. There are housewives' leagues, men's leagues, bantam leagues, junior leagues, senior citizens leagues."

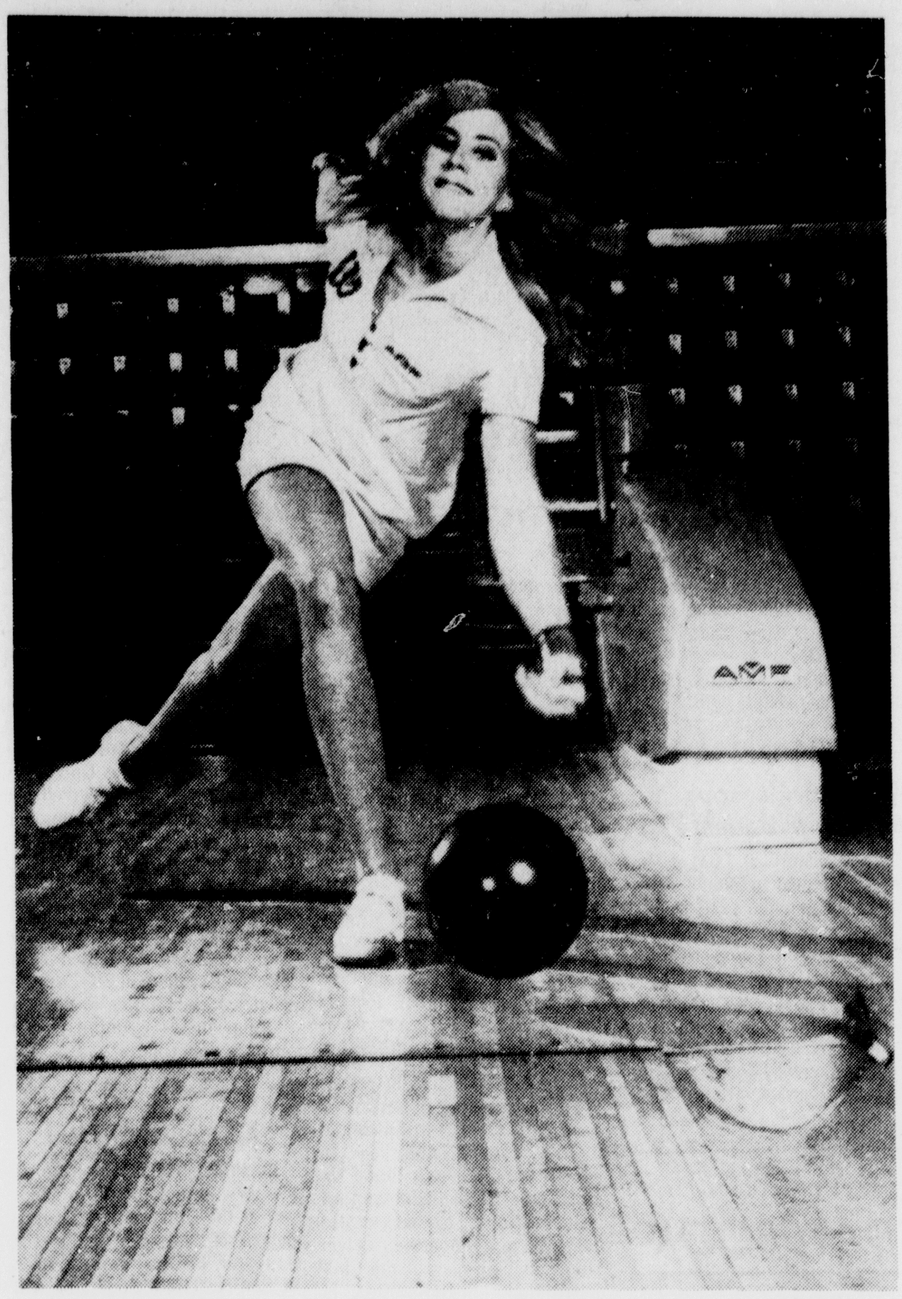
"I guess the only sport that passes bowling is fishing."

Miss Sperber said bowling keeps one fit, disciplines both mind and body, but concedes that for pure exercise "I doubt if anything is any better than swimming."

To any woman worried about developing bulging muscles, Miss Sperber said forget it. The average bowler isn't on the lanes that constantly.

In her case, however, her left arm (bowling arm) has grown slightly larger than the right. "Mother makes most of my clothes," she said, "so it's no problem."

Her clothes include hot pants (with required overskirt), causing admiring sportswriters to refer to the girl with the long yellow hair as "a tornado in miniskirt."



PAULA SPERBER has rolled to the top of the bowling world in a short time. Now 21, she has already been named "Woman Bowler of the Year" and has turned her earnings into $15,000 a year plus expenses.

(UPI Telephoto)

MISS SPERBER is one of three daughters of a Miami manager of an electronics firm.

The whole family bowls, she said, "although I think that recently they've spent more time watching me." Her tournament average this year is running around 201, up from last year's 198.

What of the future? Well, she said, some professionals go right on into their 40s, even 50s. But one day, she plans to return to school. She had finished one year at Dade College when AMF hired her.

'Chauvinism' Taken From The French

CHICAGO (UPI)—As a spinoff of their movement, women's liberation leaders have given new importance to the name of an obscure French soldier.

"Male chauvinism" is a borrowed phrase stemming from the activities of Nicolas Chauvin, who refused to accept defeat gracefully.

Chauvin, a much-wounded soldier in the army of Napoleon, spent his final days either bragging about French victories or insisting on avenging defeats. Finally, according to Encyclopaedia Britannica, "chauvinism" became a term meaning excessive and unreasonable patriotism.

Chauvin's military attitude filled a void in the French language when, a few years after Waterloo, French writers began taking a casual view of their nation's history.

He was a native of Rochefort, a small town in western France whose attachment to military affairs dated from the 9th Century, and this may have helped account for his belligerent spirit. Such provincial background well suited the character — actually named Chauvin—introduced into a number of French stage productions which lampooned exaggerated patriotism. In a relatively short time Chauvin's reputation had burst from his neighborhood and was spread nationwide.

Thus, about 141 years ago, the French began using "chauvinism" and its derivatives. The word was accepted quickly into many other languages, although a few years later it received a strong challenge from an English word—"jingo".

This newer word also came from the entertainment world—a song popular in about 1878 with the refrain: "We don't want to fight, yet by jingo if we do-We've got the ships, we've got the men,-We've got the money too".

In fact, until rather recently American writers seemed to prefer "jingoist" to "chauvinist" when referring to pugnacious patriotism.

Lately the word chauvinist is hurled at those considered to be opponents of women's liberation.

GENERATION RAP

by Helen and Sue Bottel

Teacher Thinks Girl's Interest In Him Means It's A 'Crush'

HELEN AND SUE:

The first of this year I really flipped over one of my teachers. It wasn't a crush — I just thought he was a great teacher and I wanted to get to know him. Guess I went about it wrong 'cause he got the idea I was chasing him.

He even called my girlfriend into his room and asked her to talk to me about the "crush." Both she and I explained that I wasn't in love with him, and asked if it is wrong to be friends witp a teacher.

Then I found out he'd talked to the dean of girls about it, so I only say "Hi" when I see him at summer school, but even now he acts kinda funny and scared of me.

What can I do to convince him I'm not in love with him? I've even tried asking him about his wife. — N.I.L.

N.I.L.:

Every time you look at this teacher pis ego probably goes up another notch, so avoid him. You can't be "just friends" with a guy who suspects a "school girl crush" in every "Hi" — and maybe even enjoys it that way. — SUE

DEAR N.:

When a teacher is so paranoid he discusses a "crush" with other students and the dean, he's got a problem. Whether the problem is you or his imagination — don't make it worse by trying to "convince" him you only want friendship. He's got you pegged for a "flipped-out kid," so put him down as a wipe-out and forget him. — HELEN

DEAR RAP:

I'm going to be 17 this month and I'm really worried. Is something wrong with a girl who can't stand kids? I babysit often but I'm not able to show any affection toward the kids. I don't treat them badly, but if they try to hug me I can't stand it. Even if the mother is there, I can't pretend I like them.

My parents never treated me badly. There's no reason for my disliking children. What worries me is if I have babies, will I hate them too? — UNLOVING SITTER

DEAR U.S.:

You aren't unusual. Teenagers often feel uneasy or even unloving around smaller children, this because they're so newly graduated from the "little kid" stage. There's a bit of jealousy mixed with a certain distrust here — for they may remember back to their days of being pampered and how they took advantage of it.

Also, these youngsters you baby-sit are a "job"; and work that keeps you from fun is seldom wholeheartedly loved.

Don't worry, but do look for work that pleases you more. — HELEN

DEAR UN:

I doubt if you'll feel this way toward kids of your own, for you'll have the kind of love then that you could never show to children you baby-sit.

Knowing a baby is part of you and the man you love will make your child beautiful and precious. You'll see.

Be patient on the job, 'cuz it's practice for the rough times. Maybe you won't understand about the good times until you share them with your own children. — SUE

DEAR HELEN:

Where did the word "spouse" come from? — ABOUT TO BE ONE

DEAR ATBO:

Dunno; but daughter Kathy says it's got to be a combination of "spice" and "louse." — HELEN

Getting Rid Of Waistline Woes

By EUNICE FARMER
(Register and Tribune Syndicate)

DEAR EUNICE,

It seems that today all patterns either have a raised waistline or a set-in waistband. These are too difficult for me to fit correctly. Can I re-cut the bodice to avoid this type of seaming?

MRS. L.L.

DEAR MRS. L.L.,

In most cases that I can think of, you may eliminate both a raised waistline seam or set-in band by extending the length of the bodice. First, tie a string tightly around your own waistline. Be sure it is exactly where you wish the waistline seam of your dress to appear. Next, have someone carefully measure you from the shoulder (between the neck edge and the armhole), over the bust and stop exactly at the string tied at the waistline. This measurement should be taken both front and back.

If you are wearing a separate belt, you must add one-half to one inch additional length to allow for the belt. Now, compare this measurement with the actual pattern and you will immediately see just how much length you must add to the bodice. Extend the dart through this additional length.

If you wish the same effect as a set-in waistband, you may use a ribbon or decorative braid trim, applying it from the waistline upwards. This trim will usually fit better if it is secured with loose stitches at the upper edge only. Leave the edge free at the waistline.

MRS. ROBERT E. Pierce of Middleboro, Mass., is this week's tailor trix pressing board winner for her following sewing suggestion:

"Everytime I put certain knits in the sewing machine, ready to sew, I become exasperated because they keep catching on the feed dogs and pulling out of line as well as snagging. I finally discovered that if I simply dropped the feed dogs before I put the material under the needle, it eliminated all this pulling and catching. My machine raises and lowers the feed dog with one simple operation. Now I have solved this problem easily."

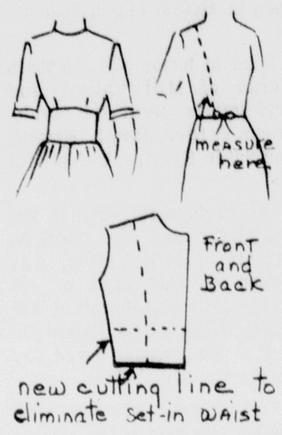
DEAR EUNICE,

I'm writing about discontinued patterns that are available for special order only. Why can't discontinued patterns be used by churches, missionaries or other groups in need of patterns without the expense?

MRS. N. McM.

DEAR MRS. N. McM.,

First of all, once a pattern is discontinued officially by any of the large companies, there is no way it can be ordered again because these patterns are not stored or saved.



In order for a retail outlet to get the credit for any discontinued pattern, they must remove and destroy the contents of the patterns, returning only the envelope to the pattern companies for credit. Although I'm sure that some shops would be happy to give any worthwhile organization the pattern itself, it would be too confusing without the envolope.

This is one little detail that seems to be so simple to the individual customer, yet is rather complex in a business operation. You must unde r stand both sides of the story.

DEAR EUNICE,

I am planning a double knit sports jacket for my husband. Is it advisable to completely line this type of jacket? Also, what type of interfacing and lining should be used?

MRS. A. A. P.

DEAR MRS. A. A. P.,

Most sports jackets for men have only a partial lining, the fronts are lined as far as the side front seam and a half lining is applied to the back. However, this is a matter of taste. Some expensive tailors still prefer a complete lining so the choice is up to you. You would use a hair canvas for the interfacings to retain the shaping and prevent the garment front and collar from "wilting." Most men's jackets are lined in either a pure silk or a silk and bemberg combination. Think about a print or colorful lining. They are new and look very custom made.

Regardless of whether your jacket is to be made of polyester, wool, silk or linen, don't plan to wash it. After you have spent hours of your time for construction, it simply won't look the same after it is washed. Manufacturers of fine men's wear of polyester don't recommend washing, so take a tip from them.

MUSIC REVIEW

Outdoor Performance By Violinist, Pianist

By ROBERT M. NESS

Violinist William Pynchon performed an ambitious slate of works last night before an audience of about 75 persons at Mill Valley's Outdoor Arts Club.

Accompanied by pianist Shirley Winther Bracco, Pynchon opened the program with Handel's D major Sonata. The clarity and lightness of his playing beautifully emphasized the more Italian lyric style of Handel and immediately revealed him to be a violinist of considerable means.

Of the three French works that followed, a small piquant work of Erik Satie, "Choses Vues a Droite et a Gauche," was the most successful. Here Miss Bracco and Pynchon were really with it. The dry humor of the eccentric Satie sparkled in each of the three short movements.

In Gabriel Faure's Sonata Op. 13, the pianist displayed her dazzling virtuosity and sensuous phrasing to the utmost. Additionally, Miss Bracco has an uncanny ability to turn pages while playing. However, although admirable in their execution, the resulting "swooshes" were nonetheless distracting.

The "Poeme" of Ernest Chausson is a gigantic violin work requiring a mastery of nearly every violinistic device. Octaves, double-stops, scales and arpeggios are all over the instrument. The heart of the work, though, is found in the surging series of lyrical climaxes.

Pynchon's performance came close, but never quite made it. His technique was all it should be and he had a feel for the work, yet climaxes were continually losing their potential because of premature arrivals. Essentially, he used all his best punches before he needed them.

This was not the case in the two power-packed works that concluded the program. The "Nigun" (Improvization) from the "Baal Shem" of Ernest Bloch is an emotional and dramatic expression that builds to a powerful climax —not unlike traditional gypsy violin music.

The emotional intensity of the work demands that the violinist actually extend beyond the limits of his instrument. Pynchon's playing was very expressive and came across well.

The concluding "Roumanian Folk Dances" of Bartok provided a striking contrast. Lively and full of rhythm and fun, Pynchon's performance was especially thrilling. As an encore he played the "Romance" from Henry Wieniawski's Second Violin Concerto.

The program was a benefit for the Scholarship fund of the San Francisco Academy of Music and Arts.

Marin Will Appeal Ruling On Juveniles

Marin officials decided yesterday to appeal a federal court ruling on juvenile cases that threatens to disrupt the juvenile court system and cost Marin up to $60,000 a year.

Judge Stanley A. Weigel of the U.S. District Court in San Francisco ruled that poor parents in juvenile hearings where their children could be taken away are entitled to an appointed attorney at no cost.

Marin County Counsel Douglas J. Maloney said he will ask for a stay and appeal the class action suit to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal in San Francisco.

"It is part of the general philosophy that everybody is entitled to a lawyer for everything for free," Maloney said of the decision, which, he said, may be the first of its kind in the state.

He said the state District Court of Appeal has ruled that attorneys need not be appointed for the custody hearings.

"As a general rule, people haven't sought attorneys in these juvenile court proceedings because, quite frankly, there isn't a helluva lot for an attorney to do," he said.

In such a proceeding, the juvenile court judge usually hears the opinions of a probation officer and the parents, then decides what is in the child's best interest, Maloney said.

Presiding Judge Henry J. Broderick said Weigel's order could disrupt the court because Judge Joseph G. Wilson, the juvenile court judge, and juvenile court referee Jack L. Blaine will have to go back through the files and appoint attorneys.

Attorney fees could run as high as $60,000 a year, he said.

But cost is no reason to violate a constitutional right to counsel, according to Weigel.

"The parental interest at stake is so fundamental that the resulting classification between those who can and cannot afford a private attorney violates the equal protection clause unless the state demonstrates an overriding interest in maintaining the classification. The only state interest seriously urged is avoidance of the expense of paying counsel. This is not sufficiently compelling," he said.

Ballet Company Will Be Busy

Marin Civic Ballet has announced a series of events in its "Summer of '72" program, beginning next week.

The company will perform "The Gift To Be Simple," Sunday, Monday and Tuesday at 7 p.m. on Northgate State at the Marin Art and Garden Center.

On Aug. 9, the ballet will stage a luncheon and fashion show at noon at art and garden center.

A concert will be performed at the Inverness Music Festival Aug. 19 at 3 p.m. and another concert at Marin Veterans Memorial Auditorium at 8 p.m. Aug. 31.

The Marin Civic Ballet School will hold fall registration Aug. 21 to Sept. 1 and the school will hold an open house Sept. 13 featuring tours and a business meeting.

Removal Of Fire Tax Rate Asked

The Muir Beach Community Services District board agreed Thursday night to ask the board of supervisors to remove the county's tax for structural fire protection from property in that community.

Chairman Bruce E. Harlow said the board believes Muir Beach property owners should no longer have to pay for county fire protection since the community now has its own volunteer fire department and a fire truck.

Marin's structural fire tax, levied in areas protected by the county fire department, is currently 32 cents per $100 assessed valuation, he said.

State Driver Licenses To Be In Color

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Beginning today, all California drivers licenses will be issued with color photographs of the bearer, the Department of Motor Vehicles announced.

New equipment to convert to the color photographs has been installed in all department offices, a spokesman said.

The front of the new licenses will be coated with glass-beaded plastic. The coating reflects an embedded state seal design which inhibits and reveals any attempt to erase or alter the license.

As a result of the changeover the cost of applying for a new license will increase from $3 to $3.25, with a duplication going from $1 to $1.25.

Officials said it would take four years to replace the present black-and-white licenses with color, since most licenses are intended to last four years.

The change was authorized by legislation approved last year.

Erase Race Imbalance, Schools Told

REDWOOD CITY (UPI) — Superior Court Judge Frank W. Rose Friday ordered the Sequoia Union High School District to formulate within five days a plan to eliminate racial imbalance among its 12,000 students in six high schools. Rose issued the order following five days of hearings. "There is a racial imbalance in the district and there is no present indication that a program intended to achieve compliance (with a new state law) is a project in the district. There is a need for action," he said.

The new law, which went into effect in March, requires school districts to make plans for eliminating and to prevent racial imbalance in California schools. It requires the school districts to submit their enrollment plans on racial balance to the State Department of Education.

Judge Rose continued the hearing until July 21, at which time he ordered the Sequoia school officials to present such a plan.

The Sequoia District has a 20 per cent minority enrollment, testimony indicated. But it is as high as 50 per cent in the district's Ravenswood High School in East Palo Alto, the judge was told.

Land Use Topic

The Novato Planning Commission will consider land use and earthquake safety at a session on revisions to the Novato area general plan at 8 p.m. Monday at the community house.

Marin City Council To Eye Key Topics

Several topics of interest and concern to Marin City residents, from a proposed medical center to a new community corporation, will be discussed at a special meeting of the Marin City Council at 8 p.m. Monday in the Manzanita Center.

Lee Vella Bland, council vice chairman, said the group will hear reports on a plan to reorganize the Marin City Tenants Union and on the dislocation of families created by plans to demolish the old Hilarita housing project in Tiburon.

Nesbitt Crutchfield, head of the Marin City Employment Service, will report on a project to obtain federal funds to provide jobs for unemployed residents.

Prentiss Rayford, a leader in the county drive against sickle cell anemia, will talk about a proposed medical center for the community. Miss Bland said proponents of the center have asked the Marin City Community Services District for space in the Manzanita Center. The program also would be used to train residents in paramedical work, she said.

Other items to be discussed include the latest bid to obtain Manzanita School from the Sausalito School District and a recently formed landscaping corporation's new contract to do work for the Marin County Housing Authority.

Also to be considered is a proposal by the council to be designated as an advisory commitee to the Marin County Redevelopment Agency on redevelopment plans for the community.

School Board Candidate Nights Set

Four candidates for two seats on the Sausalito School District board will discuss the issues at two candidates' nights in Sausalito July 11 and 13.

The first forum, sponsored by the Sausalito Women's Club and the League of Women Voters of Southern Marin, will be held at 7:45 p.m. at the women's club.

The second, presented by Sausalito Citizens Council, will be at 8 p.m. July 13 in Central School.

The trustee election is July 18.

Seeking the board seat left vacant by the recent resignation of Delta Christ are housewife Arlene Knudsen and attorney Douglas B. Martin Jr., both of Sausalito. Mrs. Christ's term will expire in June 1975.

Vying for the seat of former trustee Jerry L. Whitcomb are Judith B. Silver, Sausalito housewife, and Jesse E. Berry Jr., retired Marin City electrician. Whitcomb's term will expire in June 1973.

Almost 11.4 millions of acres of forest cover three-fourths of West Virginia.

HE WAITED A LONG TIME

An 80-year-old retired Detroit real estate developer recently had his lifelong dream come true. Michael William Murphy (right) was ordained into the priesthood of the Roman Catholic Church by Most Reverend Vincent S. Waters of the Raleigh, N.C., diocese. The ordination took place in St. Margaret's Church in Maggie Valley, N.C. — a church which Murphy built in honor of his mother.

SAN RAFAEL CHURCH IS SITE

'Youth Crusade' Set For Marin

"Crusade for Young Marin," an interdenominational evangelistic series, will be held July 7-16 at First Baptist Church in San Rafael.

The crusade, which will involve persons from several denominations in Marin, will feature a group of musicians from Sweden called the "Messengers." Speaker will be Rev. John Torell, formerly of Jonkoping, Sweden.

Rev. Barett M. Lampp, pastor of First Baptist Church, said the program will begin at 7:59 p.m. each night during the crusade. A coffee house will be open each evening in the church's educational wing, following the regular crusade program. A nursery will be provided.

The crusade and coffee house will feature Bob Makarov, formerly of Estonia and Australia, now a Mill Valley resident. He will sing with the "Messengers," a group of six musicians who play "anything from hymns to God-rock," Makarov said.

The 10-day event also will feature a new choir called "Young Marin Singers," composed of young people from Christian organizations throughout the county. Choir director is Robert Findley of Mill Valley. Rehearsals are held at 7:30 p.m. on Friday evenings in the church's educational wing. Findley said youths of junior high through college age are welcome.

Music groups and choirs from throughout the Bay area also are expected to participate in the series which will be open to the public.

Torell, an evangelist and a student at Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary in Mill Valley, said the crusade's main emphasis will be toward teenagers and young adults, "but we will not exclude persons who are older or even younger," he added.

The young evangelist is a native of Sweden and in his youth was a gang leader among teen-agers in Jonkoping. At age 17, he was the leader of a youth night club boasting more than 50 members, but his hometown activities were squelched when his parents sent their son off to college in Trolhattan, Sweden.

After earning a degree in engineering and marrying his wife, Aina, the couple moved to Salt Lake City to enter business.

They both "accepted Jesus Christ" in 1965 as they watched a crusade by evangelist Billy Graham on television. Torell said by 1967 he "felt led" to enter the ministry and, in 1970, he and his wife came to Marin where he began his seminary training.

Torell has worked as a youth evangelist for the Southern Baptist General Convention of California. Last summer, he spent four months in Sweden with Makarov and the Messengers in a series of crusades held in churches and tents, and "drawing a cross-section of Swedish society," Torell said.

Makarov, a missionary with Bay Area Estonians, at age 9 left Estonia with his parents in 1944. He speeks four languages and has a weekly radio program to Estonians in the Bay area.

The six Swedish members of the Messengers are on their first major tour in the U.S. The group has paid its own expenses to come to the U.S. and will be playing tour engagements in California through mid-August.

Makarov said "prospects are good" for a record album, featuring the group, to be sold this summer. The group also has played on Swedish television.

The band is led by Samuel Bergh, 26, a graduate student in engineering at the University of Lund, Sweden. The group features piano, organ, lead and rhythm guitar, bass and drums, in addition to vocals.

Merger Movement Seems Coming Apart

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

It is a paradox that the church merger movement seems to be falling apart at the very time when the spirit of unity prevails among Christians to a greater degree than it has for 500 years.

The recent withdrawal of the United Presbyterians from the Consultation on Church Union confirmed the fears of some and the hopes of others that nothing much is going to come of COCU's 10-year-old attempt to achieve a merger of nine major Protestant dominations.

It was from the United Presbyterian fold —specifically, from Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, then stated clerk of the United Presbyterian Church —that the COCU proposal came originally. Dr. Blake, now general secretary of the World Council of Churches, decided years ago that his dream of a great Protestant church of 25 million members would not be realized in his time. But he has kept quiet about his conclusion because he didn't want to pull the plug on whatever remote chance COCU might still have.

At their denomination's recent annual convention in Denver, United Presbyterian delegates voted to withdraw from COCU. This decision may have been impulsive, and many Presbyterian leaders hope it will be reversed at next year's convention. But it comes on top of a statement by another charter COCU member, the United Church of Christ, candidly acknowledging that this doesn't seem to be the season for church union in the sense of organizational merger.

Meantime, the National Council of Churches, a loose federation of Protestant and Orthodox denominations, still is groping for a scheme of reorganization that will keep it in business. It also cherishes hope of bringing the Roman Catholic Church into its membership. But even if it survives, the NCC has ceased to be a dynamic influence in American religion, and it seems unlikely to recover that role under any of the reorganization plans now being considered.

Relationships between Protestants and Catholics are more cordial, and imbued with greater mutual respect, then at any time since the Reformation. Catholic scholars have been meeting with theologians of various Protestant communions in bilateral talks, and in each instance there has been delighted surprise on both sides to discover how much they really have in common.

Within the Protestant world, there are signs of lessening friction between evangelicals, who take a strict view of the Bible's authority, and so-called "mainline" denominations, which are more liberal in their theology. It is not so much a matter of either side coming around to the other's viewpoint as of both remembering the scriptural admonition to love even those with whom you disagree.

The future course of the ecumenical movement is impossible to predict, but there seem to be reasonable grounds for anticipating three general trends:

—There will be increasing emphasis on unity at the local level. Protestants of closely similar denominations may merge small congregations to form strong united churches in many communities. Short of outright merger, they are almost certain to discover and exploit the enormous financial savings to be gained from sharing buildings, staff and facilities.

—Merger negotiations will continue, with fair prospect of eventual success, within such Protestant "families" as the Lutherans and Presbyterians in which there now are several separate denominations.

—The Catholic Church will move gradually toward establishment of intercommunion with the Anglican churches, which are nearer to Catholicism in their theology than any other Reformation churches. Intercommunion means each church recognizes the validity of the other's priesthood and sacraments, so that an Anglican could receive communion in a Catholic church or viceversa. It leaves both bodies entirely autonomous in organization and discipline.

PULPIT GUEST — James Berry, missionary to Sierra Leone, will be pulpit guest, along with his family, of Central Assembly of God Church in San Rafael at 6 p.m. tomorrow. The Berrys will present slides, curios and national costumes gathered during their travel.

Soil Tilled In Support Of Church

ALTOONA, Kan. — Farmers in the Altoona area have a unique way of supporting their church. They work a 60-acre farm, and have for 15 years.

Here are the economics: The land is rented on thirds, a common practice in the area whereby the landlord receives one-third of the crop as the payment for rent. The owner pays one third of the cost of fertilizers and the operators pay the remaining two-thirds as well as the full seed bill.

Larry Marple, a young farmer who manages the operation, says: "When it's time to plant, we get 10 or 12 tractors out there and do the plowing in half a day. When we harvest, four combines and nine trucks can finish the job in a day."

Milo is the big crop and even though "the Lord's Farm" is planted last and harvested last — after the farmers have completed their own labors — the yield of milo has been greater than the best harvested on the farms of the men who turn out to work for the church.

The yield of was an average of 117 bushels to the acre — which tells some that "a man's heart deviseth his way; but the Lord directeth his steps." (Los Angeles Times Syndicate)

Many Views On Church And State

By LOUIS CASSELS
U.P. International

"Separation of church and state" is a cardinal principle of the republic whose 196th birthday we are preparing to celebrate.

But what does this oft-used phrase really mean? Everyone has his own idea, but on one - not even the Supreme Court - has been able to define it with clarity and consistency.

Contrary to a widespread impression, the phrase itself does not appear in the Consititution. Its first public appearance was in a letter written by Thomas Jefferson in which he gave his interpretation of what was intended by the First Amendment to the Constitution.

What the First Amendment actually says is: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercies thereof . . ."

It's easy enough to say, in general terms, that the Founding Fathers meant for government to keep its hands off religion, neither promoting nor repressing any variety of it.

But a long line of Supreme Court decisions - some directly contradicting each other - show how difficult it is to apply this general rule to specific situations.

This should surprise no one, says Prof. Elwyn A. Smith of Temple University, one of the nation's foremost authorities on church-state relations. In his new book, "Religions Liberty in the United States," Smith says it is a practical impossibility to erect an airtight "wall of separation" between church and state.

It is possible, he says, to stipulate that "the state must not enter the sphere of doctrine or personal conduct which lacks social significance." But religious teachings may easily lead to social consequences which the government cannot ignore. For example, they may prevent doctors from giving a dying child a needed blood transfusion. They may require that a child quit school before completing the years of study demanded by a state's compulsory school attendance law. In an extreme case, they may stimulate racial conflict and civil violence.

In recent decisions, several courts have overruled religious objections of Jehovah's Witnesses parents to order blood transfusions for sick children. On the other hand, the Supreme Court in May unanimously upheld the right of the Amish to refuse to send their children to high school. Courts generally have taken the position that the law can concern itself with the preaching of bigotry for example, by Black Panthers of white Klansmen only when it actually incites violence.

One of the fuzziest areas of church-state relations is the propriety of special tax privileges for religious bodies. Churches are exempt from property taxes in most American communities. This takes about $100 billion worth of real estate off the tax rolls and makes tax rates correspondingly higher for other property owners. Thus far, courts and legislatures have been wary of interfering with this ancient custom. But the trend is strongly in the direction of narrowing its scope to property actually used for worship, while taxing income-producing commercial property which happens to be owned by religious bodies.

Finally, and most vexing of all, is the perennial question of state aid to church-related schools. Although Smith is a Protestant who ardently believes in the basic principle of church-state separation, he disagrees with the Supreme Court's ruling of a year ago that state aid to parochial schools represents a "excessive entanglement" of government and religion and so violates the Constitution.

Smith thinks it would be entirely constitutional — and "to the advantage of our whole society" — to provide some kind of financial help, through tax credits or otherwise, to parents "whose religious convictions demand a religious education for their children."

NEW PASTOR — Rev. Fred J. Landdeck will be installed as new pastor of Shepherd of the Hills Lutheran Church in Tiburon at 10 a.m. tomorrow. He succeeds Rev. Dr. R. Dale Lechleitner, who is retiring. Landdeck most recently served as pastor of First Lutheran Church in Pomona.

Prison Play At Church In Terra Linda

The Barbwire Theater of San Francisco will present "The Cage," by Rick Cluchey, at Christ Presbyterian Church in Terra Linda t 7 p.m. Sunday, July 9.

"The Cage" was written by Cluchey whilte in San Quentin Prison. To join the Barbwire Theater group, a non-profit organization, members must share one historical similarity — a stretch in "stir."

"The Cage" is a one-act, acid-etched portrait of prison existence. Cluchey said 11 years of "research" went into it.

"We're trying to effect changes in the system," he remarked cooly. "But first, to get your attention, and not just preach to you, it's got to be good art."

In plot and action, "The Cage" is earthy and explores a day in the realtionships of four men, all losing their grip on sanity and who share four walls of bars. ("This is not a cell," says one of the actors. "A cell represents life, a cage death.")

After the curtain and a breather, the actors return on stage to answer questions and trade ideas with the audience.

The Barbwire Theater has been touring for three years, playing on campuses and in communities all across the U.S.

Clive Barnes of the New York Times said of the play, "Strange and wild — I would go to prison for its right to say what it is saying."

"Harrowing, funny and mocking" said Edwin Newnan of WNBI-TV "It's quite a play. I'm still reeling from its impact."

"Gritty, tough and utterly absorbing," commented Emory Lewis of The Record.

Tickets, priced at $1, may be obtained at the church office, or at the door.

Myers Will Bless Boats At Inverness

Rt. Rev. C. Kilmer Myers returns tomorrow to Inverness for the third annual Blessing of Boats on Tomales Bay.

The blessing begins at Inverness Yacht Club at 1:15 p.m. In past years, Myers, a boating enthusiast, has taken part in the opening boat race of the season, which follows the ceremonies.

Woman-Rights Drive Gaining New Ground

NEW YORK (AP) — The drive for women's rights is rocking the religious world. Not only are women gaining new ground in church administration and the Protestant ministry, but they've won a foot-hold in the Jewish rabbinate, are pressing for the Catholic priesthood and some hope this summer to elect the first Methodist bishop.

They've even stirred theological rethinking about the "gender" of God.

The image of an "exclusively he-God" has been used for sexual oppression, writes Catholic theologian Mary Daly of Boston College in a recent issue of Commonweal. She adds that getting rid of the primitively instilled view of a "masculine divinity" may bring a more authentic language of transendance for God.

Although Judeo-Christian theology always has recognized that God transcends sex or other human objectification, some thinkers suggest that the concept, in human understanding, might better be as both "father-mother".

In the arena of church officialdom, the possibility that there might soon be a "Madam Bishop" turned up in advance of a heavy concentration of episcopal elections scheduled this month in the United Methodist Church.

"We look forward to the very real possibility of electing a woman a bishop," says Carleen Waller, of Nashville, Tenn., a woman's caucus leader.

At the United Methodist Church's recent governing convention, it ordered all "male oriented" language removed from its Book of Discipline, specifically in regard to the office of bishop.

Other current developments on the women's religious front include:

-For the first time in American Judaism, a woman, Sally Priesand, was ordained a rabbi in June, after completing studies at Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Cincinnati.

-Several denominations are pushing new policies to increase the proportion of women on executive staffs. The Christian Churches Disciples, which originally set a goal of one-half women officials, recently cut that to one-third for practical reasons.

-The New York diocesan convention of the Episcopal Church urged it to admit women to its priesthood. It is expected to act on the issue next year. Already, several women have been ordained as Episcopal deacons, the first stage of the priesthood.

Rabbi Carlebach In San Francisco

Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach, known around the world for his Hassidic melodies and stories, is in San Francisco until July 4 for his annual teach-in.

It is being held at the House of Love and Prayer, 1456 9th Avenue.

Morning classes will be held from 10 a.m. to noon, evening classes from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. There will be no charge, but donations will be accepted.

Church Of Brethren In Budget Cut

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Church of the Brethren has announced reductions in its national budget and staff in a reluctant bow to economic pressures.

The 181,000-member church, in convention here, said $200,000 was being cut from its 1973 budget and four staff members were being released.

"There have been indications for the past few years," the church said in a prepared statement Wednesday, "that the inflationary spiral of the sixties was moving the operational costs of the church program beyond the level of resources available to the General Board.

"It was hoped the economic picture would change and that the ministries of the church could continue at current levels."

Staffers being released worked in commissions on world ministries, parish ministries and general services.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

By DR. THEODORE R. VAN DELLEN

Some Tips For Keeping Next Family Picnic A Healthy One

Don't let food poisoning ruin your next picnic. Unfortunately, the most popular picnic items (hamburgers, cream pies and potato and macaroni salads) are notorious offenders. Keep cold foods and meats in the portable ice chest. Also bring along paper towels and soap so that the hands can be washed at the pump or restroom area. This should be done before food is prepared and eaten.

Food poisoning occurs when edibles have been contaminated by microorganisms and bacterial toxins. The condition is not difficult to recognize. Abdominal cramping develops from one to 24 hours after the contaminated food or beverage is ingested. Nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, exhaustion and fever follow.

THE VICTIM is healthy one moment and deathly ill the next. Much depends upon the type of germ involved and the degree of contamination. The same applies to recovery. Staphylococcal food poisoning, for example, may last from three to six hours whereas poisoning from the salmonella group of bacteria can last several days.

The ensuing illness may be so acute that the sufferer collapses and does not want to be moved, bathed or touched. Almost any medicine given by mouth is likely to be vomited. This hampers treatment and demonstrates why food poisoning is better prevented than treated.

On the other hand, nature is trying to eliminate the poison emptying the stomach and intestines as fast as possible. In this respect, vomiting and diarrhea should not be stopped unless the symptoms are leading to dehydration and weakness. There is no need for castor oil or Epsom salts, because it is impossible to improve on the existing diarrhea. Intravenous fluids are given when the individual becomes dehydrated and morphine may be needed for relief if the victim is thoroughly exhausted.

SMALL AMOUNTS of cracked ice, barley water, and tea can be given as soon as the stomach quiets down. Later, custards, gelatin, eggs, toast, milk, broth, or cream soups are added if they can be retained. Kaolin, Lomotil, paregoric, or bismuth or an antibiotic, such as chloromycetin or tetracycline is helpful. Solid foods usually can be tolerated on the second or third day.

(Questions on medical topics will be answered by mail if stamped, self-addressed envelope accompanies request to the Independent-Journal.)

CUTTING FACIAL NERVE

J. writes: What is meant by section of the trigeminal nerve for facial neuralgia (tic douloureux)?

REPLY

The nerve is cut (sectioned) to relieve the terrible pain (neuralgia) in the face. However, the procedure leaves the face permanently numb.

REST AND SLEEP

L. E. writes: Does resting in bed with the eyes closed have as much effect upon the body as actual sleep?

REPLY

No, but it's the next thing to it and much better than tossing about in bed and becoming upset emotionally because sleep eludes us.

RELAX AFTER EATING

N. C. writes: Is it better to rest after dinner or be active?

REPLY

Resting aids digestion. Since most animals rest after eating, it must be the natural thing to do. Exercise does no harm provided the heart is normal.

LIVER AND ALCOHOL

A reader writes: Does an enlarged liver go down when alcohol is stopped?

REPLY

Improvement occurs, if you refer to cirrhosis of the liver. Enlargement from this origin is caused by the infiltration of fatty cells into the tissues of the liver. Shrinkage and hardening of the liver are late manifestations of cirrhosis. Therefore, in some instances, it is not a good sign when the organ gets smaller.

ALCOHOL AND THE NERVES

H. A. writes: What effect would drinking have on a person with an unstable nervous system?

REPLY

A small amount of alcohol has a calming effect on the nervous person. But the unstable personality is the best candidate for alcoholism. Send stamped, self-addressed envelope for our leaflet on alcoholism.

STONES AND PREGNANCY

Mrs. V. writes: If a pregnant woman needs surgery for kidney stone, is the baby affected?

REPLY

No. Surgery is not done on pregnant women unless absolutely necessary. When it is, the majority of mothers-to-be undergo the operation without complications and with no harm to the child.

FRATERNAL TWINS

A reader writes: Can a boy and girl be identical twins?

REPLY

THEY GOT OUT ALIVE

Fifteen tons of wet concrete fell yesterday from a downtown overpass under construction in Dallas, Texas and hit a passing automobile. The occupants of the car, 63-year-old James Collins and 74-year-old Willie Mitchell, were seriously injured. The concrete flattened their car to the level of the door handles. Collins and Mitchell were trapped inside for 15 minutes, and were freed by firemen and construction workers using prybars to peel back the roof.

Park Named San Quentin Ombudsman

Associate warden James W. L. Park has been appointed ombudsman of San Quentin in an experimental program designed to serve both inmates and employees of the prison.

The traditional role of ambudsman will be modified to suit the prison setting, but the basic goal of helping persons cope with the machinery of government will remain, according to a prison announcement.

Park, 49, was replaced as prison information officer in September after his remarks on the bloody escape attempt at San Quentin in August.

He will continue to serve as associate warden with prime responsibility for death row — as it is phased out — and inmate activities.

In his new post, Park will be able to make recommendations for policy changes give advice and make contacts in handling employee and inmate problems.

SEA SCOUTS' NEW FLAGSHIP

Both on deck (left) and along the gunwales (top), two members of Explorer Sea Scout Ship 55 of San Rafael begin what promises to be tedious work for the group — a two-year refurbishing job on a newly acquired torpedo retriever declared surplus by the Navy. The 72-foot vessel, towed to the San Rafael Canal from Port Hueneme near Ventura, once hauled unarmed torpedoes to shore during naval practice maneuvers off Southern California. The boat, capable of sleeping 20, will be outfitted with new engines. The scouts at work are Paul Oullette (left in photo at left and leaning over deck in above photo) and Ronald Heselton, both 15, both of San Quentin.

Drumgo Can Choose His Own Attorney

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Soledad Brother Fleeta Drumgo has been granted the right to chose an attorney to defend him on charges of murdering three guards and two honor inmates during a San Quentin escape try last year.

The State Court of Appeal ordered Marin County Superior Court yesterday to appoint attorney Richard Hodge to replace Richard Breiner of San Rafael, who was named counsel for Drumgo over both the inmate's and Breiner's objections.

Justice A.F. Bray said in the opinion that the defendant does not have the absolute right to choose his own lawyer, but he said the Marin Court "abused its discretion" in refusing to appoint Hodge.

Hodge's appointment "would have required no additional continuances or loss of time and no unnecessary duplication of effort," Bray said.

Hodge, praising the decision, said it would open the way for a "broader base of attorneys" to take so-called political cases. Attorney Charles Garry, prominent in radical causes, previously asked to defend inmate John Larry Spain, also accused in the San Quentin fray.

The state attorney general's office indicated it may appeal yesterday's decision, which included a 60-day stay of execution.

Drumgo is not charged in the death of late Soledad Brother George Jackson, the sixth victim in the abortive escape try Aug. 21, 1971.

Drumgo and a third Soledad Brother, John Clutchette, were acquitted March 27 on charges of murdering a Soledad Prison guard in January 1970.

Hodge was the attorney for James Carr, a one-time cellmate of Jackson's who was assassinated several months ago. The attorney also represented Los Siete de la Raza, six Latin American youths acquitted two years ago in the 1969 slaying of a San Francisco policeman.

Nixon Will Approve Social Security Hike

WASHINGTON (UPI) —President Nixon agreed today to sign into law an extension of the ceiling on the national debt that carries a 20 per cent increase in Social Security benefits for 27.8 million Americans which he had criticized as "highly inflationary" only two days before.

The President announced his decision on the first day of the new fiscal year. His action will extend for four months the "temporary" $450 billion debt limit which by law had reverted to $400 billion at midnight Friday.

He said he would sign the legislation before leaving later in the day for an extended stay at the San Clemente, Calif., White House.

The 20 per cent Social Security increase rider, which won final congressional approval in a flurry of legislative activity late Friday before Congress recessed for two weeks for the Democratic National Convention.

But since the national debt now stands at about $428 billion, a veto of the limit extension bill would have cut off the government's borrowing power and threatened further disruption of the already unstable international monetary situation.

Under the Social Security section of the bill, bigger pension checks will start going out just before the November elections, but the increased payroll taxes to finance the payments boost will be deferred until Jan. 1.

The President had requested a Social Security increase of only 5 per cent, which the House approved but the Senate quadrupled. His supporters in Congress made a last-minute effort to reduce the rider from 20 to 10 per cent, but failed.

Other legislation sent to the White House Friday night would provide $200 million in emergency disaster relief to flood victims in the east and in South Dakota, and for the next 12 months authorize $1 billion to run the State Department and the U.S. Information Agency and $5 billion for the Treasury Department, the Postal Service and related agencies.

For government departments and agencies whose budgets have not been approved for the fiscal year that began today, Congress passed a temporary authorization bill allowing them to spend at fiscal 1972 levels.

Japan Takes Action To Cleanse Bad Air

By ELIZABETH POND

News Service

TOKYO — Purveyors of rotten eggs, rotten onions, and rotten cabbages — beware! Your aromatic wares are no longer appreciated. The cabinet has decreed it. An official report has proclaimed it.

As of now, Japan's new foul-odor-control ordinance, believed to be the first in the world, forbids concentrations above the range of 2.5-3.5 (on a scale of 6) of hydrogen sulfide (rotten eggs), methyl mercaptance (rotten onions), methyl sulfate (rotten cabbages), ammonia (ammonia), and trimethylamine (indescribable).

Oil refineries, fertilizer plants, drying plants, cellophane manufacturing mills, garbage-treatment plants, kraft pulp mills — and presumably lax vegetable vendors — have a year's grace before the new smell-pollution controls will be enforced. After that violators will face a year's imprisonment or a 100,000 yen fine (about $330). Individual chicken and pig raisers will have a three-year grace period to comply.

Thus, on one pollution front, Japan forges ahead. On others, however, the best that can be said is that there are lots of proposals.

The most recent — Tokyo's emergency attempt, after three days of heavy photochemical smog, to ban auto traffic altogether in downtown areas on smog-prone mornings — has met heavy opposition.

The criticism of the government's national development program by the energetic environment agency director-general, Buichi Oishi, roused such a backlash that Oishi had to apologize, just on the eve of his taking off for a United Nations pollution conference in Stockholm.

Meanwhile, Japan's air gets worse. Water gets worse. Noise gets worse. Land sinkage accelerates. And the toll of deaths attributed to pollution continues to rise. The official list of diseased exceeds 6,000. An estimated 48,000 children and adults are affected by photochemical smog, quadruple the number of the previous year.

The first government white paper on pollution, issued this past week, estimates Japan's annual loss to pollution at $5 billion, a rise of 600 per cent over 1960, 2 per cent of the current gross national production (GNP). This includes damage to crops and fish, as well as industrial and household counterpollution costs.

The density of autos — the major polluter — is eight times that of the U.S. per square meter of flatland. Japan consumes 7.4 times the energy the U.S. does per square meter. It produces 11.3 times America's GNP per square meter.

An affluent society, Japan is multiplying its garbage astronomically. Families discarded 3.5 billion tons of it in 1970, enough for 40 million garbage trucks. Some 15 million television sets have been abandoned since 1955. Japan's production of hard-to-dispose-of plastics soared from 100,000 tons in 1960 to five million tons in 1970.

Plastics now comprise 12 per cent of Tokyo's garbage. If they climb to 15 per cent, they will push the temperatures so high they will wreck the disposal plants.

Another study, issued recently, put it another way. In 50 years, Japan's Science and Technology Agency warns, Tokyo will be effectively stripped of all plant life. Two-uear tests show that the majority of the capital's pine, zelkova, and even the hardy pasania trees are already in "critical condition" because of air pollution.

The environmental alarms have been sounded, and citizens are increasingly concerned. The country's first public-opinion poll on the issue — just released by the Prime Minister's Office — shows a majority favoring cleanup of the environment, even at the cost of higher prices and a slowdown in Japan's long-hallowed economic growth rate.

The hard political decisions required to halt pollution simply haven't been made, however. Until they are, odor-pollution control will remain a quixotic exception rather than a harbinger of significant environmental progress.

$660 Million For Merchant Ships Building

WASHINGTON (UPI) —President Nixon announced today contracts worth $660 million for costruction of 16 new merchant marine ships —including three giant tankers —to be built in five U.S. shipyards.

In a statement issued by the White House, the President said:

"The United States, as the leading nation engaged in world trade, must in its own self interest have a Merchant Marine commensurate with its large stake in international commerce. This administration has a firm commitment, which we are fulfilling, to restore the United States to the rank of a first class maritime power."

The President's announcement came at the end of a meeting he had at the White House with shipbuilding firm officials and labor leaders. Commerce Secretary Peter G. Peterson and Chairman Helen D. Bentley of the Federal Maritime Commission were also present.

Under the terms of the contracts, which were signed Friday, the U.S. government will supply a total of approximately $284 million in subsidies to the shipbuilding firms to make their prices competitive with leading competitors in Japan, Germany and The Netherlands. more

Administration officials estimated that construction of the new vessels, under Nixon's 1970 plan to boost the U.S. Merchant Marine, would provide 36,000 new jobs over a three-year period in the five shipyards and related industries. Another 800 men will be employed to run the ships when they are completed, the officials said.

Under terms of the contracts, all 16 ships will be built with a government subsidy of 43 per cent. But any new contracts will have only a 41 per cent federal subsidy.

Since his Merchant Marine revitalization program took effect in 1970, $1.1 billion in shipbuilding contracts have been awarded, with the government providing $479 million in subsidies, the President said. The figure included the contracts announced today.

The Editor's Notebook

Everyone Asks Uncle For His Own Money

The American people, it seems, no longer trust themselves to spend their own money. They want the government to do it for them.

That's what it amounts to when the people lean more and more on Uncle Sam. The money that Uncle "gives" them — no matter for what purpose — is their money. And when Uncle "gives" more than he has already taken from them, the people will have to make up the difference — with interest.

A penetrating look at how this works was taken last Sunday by another editor, in another "Editor's Notebook." What follows is by John S. Knight, from his "Notebook" in the Detroit Free Press and other Knight newspapers:

ONE OF THE very sad changes in our society is the vastly increasing dependence of its various elements upon the federal government.

Social Security, first legislated in 1935 as an income supplement to the elderly, is now regarded by many citizens as their main source of support.

This progressive legislation has been expanded to include disability, survivorship and health insurance. The costs continue to rise with a present 5.2 per cent of the first $ 9,000 taken from workers' salaries and a similar contribution made by employers. Social Security has gone up 26 per cent under the Nixon administration.

Proposals presently before the Congress would further increase Social Security benefits in amounts ranging from 10 to 20 per cent. Some presidential candidates have suggested even more.

IT IS IMPORTANT to understand, as the Miami Herald has said, "that in effect the Social Security bite has become just another income tax. Citizens are not simply paying into a fund from which they will draw at age 62 or 65. They are paying taxes to support current benefits, and they will have to rely on taxes paid by their children for their own benefits."

With Social Security checks now flowing to 27 million persons, and 23 million going to those registered to vote, few politicians in this election year will oppose additional increases in benefits.

The tax bite on employees and employers alike has become much more than a nibble.

OUR COLLEGES and universities look to the federal government for support, either in grants or subsidies. Private educational institutions, financed largely by private contributions, are in deep trouble as they cannot turn to generous state legislatures for additional money.

Virtually every art institute, symphony orchestra and performing arts center operates at a deficit. In time, and when tax benefits to private donors becomes less attractive, the cultural arts must inevitably turn to the government for help.

In Europe, the government has traditionally maintained the cultural arts. The question is: Do we want these activities in government hands, or to see our colleges and universities under government control and direction?

Why are the politicians, in their zeal to close tax loopholes, trying to discourage contributions from the private sector?

WHEN PRESIDENT Lyndon Johnson offered his "Great Society" programs, the rationale was that since "the United States is the richest country in the world, we can afford anything."

Since then, federal expenditures have been rising at an average annual rate of eight per cent. In the same period, state and local spending has gone upward at a rate of 10 per cent a year. David T. Wendell observes in Reader's Digest that "public spending has been going up about 50 per cent faster than the private, tax-producing part of the economy."

The Brookings Institution concludes that an "over-committed federal government cannot spend any more on trying to solve social or other problems without a big tax increase."

Even with soaring tax rates, the cities and the states seem always short of money. They look, therefore, to an already deficit-ridden federal government to assume an even greater share of the burden. . .

So to those who ask: "When will we be able to pay off or even reduce the national debt?" the answer is "Never, unless federal expenditures are held down and heavier taxes imposed upon everyone."

If you find that a discouraging thought, try this: The Brookings Institution says that even if the Congress enacts only the programs President Nixon has proposed, and no more, the federal fiscal budget by 1975 will reach $300 billion, or $17 billion more than 1975 revenues expected under present laws.

What I am trying to say is that since we have no inexhaustible sources of revenue, either the government must change course, employ realistic budgeting and disciplined spending or the shrinking U.S. dollar won't buy a good 15-cent cigar within 10 years.

IT IS ALL VERY well to explain that our citizens "demand" additional social welfare and social services. My view is that these "demands" originate with politicians and pressure groups who seek either votes or personal aggrandizement.

So whether you blame President Nixon or the Congress for our swollen bureaucracy, we will all be facing a dismal future if the country continues to spend more than it takes in.

Sen. George McGovern, Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie have been telling the people that their proposed "soak-the-rich" tax reforms will solve the nation's fiscal problems. Don't you believe it. No reputable economist would agree with them.

The last tax reform act of 1969, with all three senators concurring, resulted in a net revenue loss to the government of $2.5 billion. Their track record is not reassuring.

A nation which destroys initiative, cripples the profit and loss system, and relies on federal handouts openly embraces socialism, or worse.

I doubt that the American people want to go that dreary road to nowhere.

Another View

"Lots of the convention's caucusing will be done in smoke-filled beauty parlors. Thirty-three per cent of the Democrats' delegates are women."

"Hi, there, fellas! Here I am — your candidate, George McGovern!"

Revoluntionists Try To Betray Country

Just to let you know that I am disgusted listening to T.V. or radio, especially some station who is really anti-American. The revoluntionaries are really doing their share to betray their own country.

The people in Russia and all the communist world are good, but their leaders who dictate to them with machine guns (like in Russia about four million hard core party members) control the rest of the poor people. (No work, no eat). No opposition to their government.

You better not teach like Angela Davis; if she would have been in Russia teaching to overthrow the Communist party (first of all she would never advance that far), she would either have been shot as a traitor or in a slave camp or mental institution. They do not spend time or money on persons like Angela Davis.

Now the latest in Russia, when they have political prisoners in court, they simply declare them insane and he or she goes to a mental institution and if not given in to their demands, they make you insane. The Kremlin has been working hard all the time for a world revolution, especially right after the Second World War. Everyone of their diplomats is nothing but a professional spy. The job at the consulate or embassy is just a sideline. For instance, the ones we have here in San Francisco are just to do their underground work.

Look at our schools, churches, disguised priests, school teachers, labor unions, lawyers who do their best to brainwash our good American youth. Maybe you do not know it, but in a Communist country like Russia or China the children are really taught to hate every American with the exception of the ones who belong to the commie party. We're barbarians, etc. How can we expect to have peace in this world when the Communists teach their children to hate instead of love? The commies in our country teach our kids to love and have peace, peace, peace (but under one condition, namely, we have to give in to their demands or else). They want us to disarm and get weak while they are arming themselves so when the time is ripe we'll get an ultimatum - give up or else. Ask yourself what we are going to do without a defense? . . .

Vacation Plans Of The Great: Miami Beach For McGovern

WASHINGTON — What are well-known people in Washington going to do this summer? A recent check around town revealed the following:

Sen. George McGovern is going to Miami Beach in July for his vacation with either 1,478 or 1,509 of his dearest friends, depending on whom you talk to.

McGovern's staff said the senator plans to relax, watch television, read books on economics, and take in some night life at the Miami Convention Center.

When asked why McGovern had chosen Miami Beach for his vacation, a spokesman said, "Peter, Paul and Mary are playing at the Fontainebleau."

A CHECK with Sen. Hubert Humphrey's office revealed that the senator was going to pout.

"All summer?" I asked.

"Maybe right through until November," the voice on the other end of the phone said. "The senator has been very busy with the primaries, and he hasn't had much chance to pout in a long time. So he'll probably go back to Minnesota and just sit there in a rocking chair and look out at the sunset and pout."

"Will he pout abut anything in particular?"

"In 1960, the senator pouted about West Virginia, but this time he has decided to pout mostly about California. I would say California and money are what Senator Humphrey will be pouting about this summer."

HENRY KISSINGER'S office said Kissinger hasn't firmed up his plans for summer yet. So far, all he has on his schedule are trips to Belgrade, Bucharest, Budapest, Siberia, Ceylon, Mt. Everest, Beverly Hills, the Canary Islands, the North Pole, the Riviera, Stratford-on-Avon, Shanghai, Pisa, Bali, Stockholm, Australia, Addis Ababa, and Loch Ness.

"Except for these few trips," an aide said, "Mr. Kissinger hopes to keep his summer clear so he can go to the beach with a friend."

Sec. of Defense Melvin Laird is not going anywhere. "The Soviets are not taking a vacation," he told a congressional committee. "As a matter of fact, they are going ahead and building new missiles in July and August which will put this country at a 3-to-1 disadvantage. Unless Congress provides the funds to go ahead on the B-1 bomber and Trident submarine, I cannot in good conscience take a vacation this summer."

PRESIDENT NIXON has decided to spend his vacation in Washington, D.C., one of his favorite resort towns. A White House spokesman said, "Key Biscayne is too hot and San Clemente is too crowded, so the President has decided to take his family to Washington for the summer, and get away from it all. The Nixons have been coming here every summer for three years, and the President considers it the perfect place to rest up for the football season."

Vice President Spiro Agnew is still not sure what he's going to do this summer, and so far the President hasn't told him. Agnew's administrative assistant said, "The vice president has his heart set on going to Miami in August, but every time he asks the Committee to Re-Elect the President about an airline reservation for him, they tell him he's on 'standby.'"

Martha Mitchell also is not sure what she's going to do this summer, and her husband John is not sure what she's going to do either. When I called her, she answered the phone herself and said, "What am I going to do this summer? I'll tell you what I'm going to do this summer! I'm. . ." And then someone ripped her phone out of the wall.

Lend-Lease Debt, Interest Rate Hamper U.S.-Russian Trade Deal

WASHINGTON — Secy. of Commerce Peter Peterson is leaving shortly for Moscow and negotiations that in some respects are as difficult as the talks that led up to the Strategic Arms Limitation Agreement.

While the question of trade between the two super-powers is not so complex as the issues in the arms race, Washington and Moscow speak on trade from different viewpoints representing entirely different ways of life.

But since, as Peterson says, both sides want expanded trade, it should be possible to find a way around the differences. The Soviet Union has great stores of raw materials which could be the bulk of imports into the United States. From this country the Russians would like to buy advanced machinery that would give their productivity a boost. High on this list are computers.

THE OBSTACLES that must be cleared away before any trade agreement are the lend-lease debts. They have been under negotiation for more than two months and the end is not in sight. The amount of Soviet indebtedness — roughly $500 million — is not in dispute. But the amount of interest, with the Russians insisting on two per cent and a long grace period, is still up in the air.

The future of trade in any volume turns in large part on interest rates. The Russians began by proposing commercial credits at two per cent, conveniently ignoring the fact that the going rate in Europe is eight or nine per cent. They hoped to buy grain on a 10-year, two per cent credit basis. This seemed to American negotiators an impossible proposition for a consumable commodity. The conflict over interest rates was one thing that prevented an agreement coming out of Moscow during the President's visit.

The Soviet Union is buying several million tons of American grain, paying $125 million cash on the barrel head. Purchases like this are expected to continue not only with the United States but with Canada and Australia. One goal is to increase meat consumption, which is today in the U.S.S.R. one-third of the U.S.

For one particular and important reason, lend-lease and the interest rates are of the first importance. The Russians want to get most favored nation status which would give their exports to the United States a lower base. This requires congressional approval, and Congress would take a dim view of a lend-lease settlement on terms that seemed to be giving away America's claim with interest rates far below current levels.

AS PETER FLANIGAN, the President's counsel on economic matters who worked on trade in Moscow during the Nixon mission says, half jokingly, favored nation might make it possible to sell Russian vodka in this country for $5.50 a bottle instead of $7.50. It is here that the difference between the two economies is marked. The United States is a seller's economy with a great drive both at home and abroad to sell products.

That concept is alien to an economy in which all the means of production from a shoeshine stand to a heavy machine plant are owned and operated by the state. Supposing the Russians get most favored nation status. After a year or so they might well be asking, "Where is our most favored nation share of the U.S. market?" The answer, of course, is that competitive selling by exporting nations determines sales in the American market.

The controversy over interest rates to one side, substantial movement is in prospect. The Russians are building what is claimed will be the world's largest single production center for heavy diesel trucks with an output of 150,000 a year on the Kama River. Several American firms are bidding in competition with European firms for pieces of the construction contract.

IN THE DISTANCE looms a large deal that could eventually reach a $10-billion level. The Soviet Union has an estimated 16 per cent of the world's total natural gas reserves and the United States faces a near-desperate energy crisis. Officials of two of the largest American gas companies —Tenneco and Texas Eastern Transmission — are exploring the possibility of liquefying natural gas and shipping it from a port north of Murmansk.

This would mean a huge capital investment. How much of the billion or so necessary to swing it would the American government guarantee? This same question mark — where is the money coming from and who assumes the risks? — hovers over the whole trade negotiation.

New World Alignments Alter America's Needs In Weaponry

The debate over the next American military budget is already more lively and controversial than usual. It is marked not only by a wide difference between Nixon and McGovern proposals. There is even a vigorous difference between Mr. Nixon's secretary of defense and Mr. Nixon's secretary of state.

The secretary of defense, Mr. Laird, contends that the SALT agreement with Russia (on limiting nuclear weapons) is safe for the United States only if the Congress will also provide the funds for the full new weapons program which the Pentagon has persuaded Mr. Nixon to accept. The secretary of state, Mr. Rogers, says that there is no essential "linkage" between SALT and the new military hardware. Weapons always do seem more indispensable at Defense than at State.

FOR THE PUZZLED laymen watching this from a distance, there is one important thing to know. That is that we are all moving into a new phase of history in which it is much more difficult than usual to know just how much weaponry the United States really does need to order right now.

To get this in perspective start with the kind of world which existed from 1950 to 1960. During that decade Russia and China were official allies. They had a formal treaty of military alliance.

During that decade the United States had every visible reason to assume that if war came it would be with both Russia and China at the same time. And that was, indeed, the basic assumption behind the military posture, and the military buying programs, for that decade. The national strategy was to be ready to fight two major wars (Russia and China) and a minor war (Cuba) at the same time. It was called "the two-and-a-half war strategy."

TODAY RUSSIA and China are open and avowed enemies. They are heavily deployed against each other. Their troops have engaged in battles up to brigade size. There are more Russian soldiers facing China today than facing Western Europe.

Add that the countries of Western Europe today possess substantial military power of their own. Britain and France have enough nuclear weapons to deter Russia. West Europe collectively has about half the conventional military power of Russia. China, on the far side of Russia, has more manpower than Russia, and the beginning of a nuclear deterrent.

Weapons which Washington contracts to build now will be "on the line" in about 10 years. But what will the world look like 10 years from now? Will Russia and China be friends or enemies? Will Western Europe be more closely knitted together, or less? Who knows? No one knows.

In other words, as of today, no one can be sure what the valid military needs of the United States are. Certainly, as things are, a "two-and-a-half war strategy" would mean a fearsome waste of money. We don't need it. But what will be needed in 1980? No one knows. The best anyone can do is make a rational guess. And here is the real difficulty; the McGovern program is just as rational as the Laird program.

More Troubles Foreseen For Military After Vietnam

By GEORGE W. ASHWORTH
The Christian Science
Monitor News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite the current battlefield furor, American forces are still leaving Vietnam. Within a matter of months, Vietnam will become a relatively small part of the overall U.S. defense picture.

Yet, for the American defense establishment, the most difficult period will not be over. Indeed, travails might well become still graver.

As America backs away from Vietnam, it is clear that its forces are not in very good shape. And it is by no means certain that the difficulties will be soon sorted out. Some officers are deeply convinced that nothing short of a crisis in which the defense establishment is demonstrably inadequate will provide the momentum necessary for America to achieve the defense structure it needs.

Some analysts make the gloomy prediction that the American fighting forces will continue a general decline until a moment of need forces rearmament at tremendous cost and great inefficiency.

Others are far less gloomy; they are deeply convinced that, given time, matters will be sorted out and the defense establishment will be able to cruise along, fully capable and ready for the call, basking in the warmth of public regard and official esteem.

After weighing various aspects of the present scene, it appears that the latter scenario is unlikely, and that may be a good thing.

A great deal of reform is direly needed throughout the American military establishment. Without it, there are real questions whether the military establishment will not be grossly expensive and inadequate for national needs. Most of those who approach present issues with an underlying belief in the need for a capable American military also see need for wide reform. They also hope it can be achieved without destroying what should be saved.

These are the crucial defense issues now facing Americans and their allies:

1. It must be determined what kind of armed force will be strategically tenable, politically tenable, and affordable.

To many analysts, America is on the verge of having an armed force that in some respects will be a facade, that will be inadequate to the tasks that will be spelled out for it. It may turn out that, in defense as in the architectural sense, "less is more." Conversely, without some sharp reappraisal and readjusting, Americans may be in danger of finding out one day that in their defense establishment, "more is less."

2. The volunteer-army issued must be resolved.

There are very real questions in the minds of senior defense officials and analysts now whether the volunteer army is presently envisioned will work. The administration has said it will reach all-volunteer status by next July. Already, pressure is being exerted from within the military for more time. It is clear that America can have an all-volunteer Army and Navy and Air Force and Marines. What is less clear is just what America will have when it has it, given present directions.

3. Racial and drug difficulties — key questions when intellectuals gather to discuss the American military's future — do not seem now close to resolution.

On the drug question, there is some hope that, with the troop departures from Vietnam, one ready source of marijuana and opium will dry up. But it is problematic whether the loss of that source will present a breakthrough. Hashish and other drugs are readily available for troops in Europe, and many U.S. bases have their nearby "needle parks" and ready supplies of purshers not dependent upon Vietnam for supplies.

Perhaps the best that can be hoped is that with the disappearance of troops from battle zones, there will be less incentive to go onto drugs.

So far as racial issues are concerned, the services are still groping for ways to be fair and just without losing sight of the military mission facing units. For many unit commanders, the proper balance remains elusive. Some experts are convinced that racial issues cannot by any means be looked upon as primarily the result of the spillover effect of society's woes. There is some of that. But some experts argue that many blacks enter vice with open minds and are radicalized once in.

4. A continuing effort is necessary if costs are to be kept even close to what can be borne willingly by the public.

The alternative to better cost control, Sen. John C. Stennis D-Miss., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has made clear, is less buying. The services must do much better in keeping their appetites within bounds if the end result is not to be fairly unbalanced defenses. While there are many reasons for cost growth, as it is now known, a major one is the constant desire to get something better and better during the entire decisionmaking and production process. Thus Army tanks and Air Force planes become too sophisticated, and Navy ships grow and grow, to the dismay of budgeters.

5. Finally, there is the huge issue of the service establishments vs. those who serve in them.

In easier times, the prime division was one of enlisted men vs. officers. Now the antagonims are between the young and the modern as opposed to the old and the traditional. It is not of course as simple as that. But the senior officers and senior enlisted men now often find themselves with more in common than they have with the junior officers and junior enlisted men. This has led to sharp divisions of interest and of loyalty.

In Vietnam, for instance, many young commanders have felt themselves as having more in common with those they lead than with the hierarchy. In some cases, the young commanders have been able to help bridge the gap between the elements.

In other cases, however, they have so identified with the troops and been scornful of the dictates from above that — in an effort to be friends with the troops in battle — they have become a danger to those they lead.

The services have abandoned the old style of rough-tough leadership and discipline; they seem still to be groping for new ways to lead. Only the Marine Corps has decided to stick with the old and tried ways. The approach seems to have worked fairly well for the Marines, although the corps has trouble retaining men.

Helping a great deal is the small size of the Marine Corps. At about 200,000 in strength, it needs to attract far fewer men to its ranks than the other services.

Leadership also seems to be less of a difficult issue in the Air Force, where divisions between officers and enlisted men are not so heavily marked and there is far greater degree of working in common than in the other services. Officers tend to be less exalted, and enlisted men more so, in the Air Force than in the Army and Navy. Even in the Navy, however, experiences of the officers and enlisted men tend to be more shared.

In the Army, which places the most emphasis upon men, rather than machines, the difficulties within the ranks are huge. It is clear that many enlisted men cannot abide the Army. What is not so clear is that the Army is also thought of rather widely among officers as being in dire trouble.

A professionalism study conducted by the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., disclosed a shockingly large number of officers contemptuous of the ethical and moral standards of their peers and of other officers. The malaise, dimly perceived by the public, was protested in depth by those on the inside who have seen it in all of its ramifications.

Clearly, for the Army at least, leadership remains one of the crucial difficulties.

As a result, the Army — and the other services — are losing good officers in droves. Everyone with an interest in retention, whether casual or official, has heard some story or other of a unit losing its academy graduates or all of its regular officers to civilian life. These stories are hard to verify. But it is not difficult to see that the new peacetime military will have a hard time attracting and keeping young men of talent who might find very attractive lives outside the services.

The services can ill afford to turn aside new initiatives. At the same time, however, they cannot afford to so give way on everything in order to be agreeable that they are not respected.

The professionalism problems that plague the services are to some extent the type found in many bureaucracies. But the services have their own peculiar aspects. To dare to be different, to "buck the system," can be devastating upon one's career. In headquarters, there is tremendous pressure for uniformity and conformity. One mistake that leads to a very critical efficiency report can mar a career. If serious enough, an error can ruin a career. Thus, no one wants to be on the losing side. And, as some officers who spoke out have found, there is no fury like that of a military service scorned.

Dealing with the critical military matter of command, Lt. Cols. William L. Hauser and Zeb B. Bradford Jr. write in Army magazine, "Rather than command being the end to which one should aspire, it inevitably becomes viewed as a 'Ticket' to be punched. The pressure to rotate commanders has resulted in relatively short command tours, and these in turn encourage "quick fixes" — short-term solutions on the part of commanders. It is only human to want to have a good record. . ."

Already the services are beginning to try to improve their professionalism in a number of ways. But there is far to go. It is significant that one Army study that recognized deep-seated shortcomings in professionalism could loft only the suggestion of more wall posters or wallet cards exhorting leaders to higher standards.

The services are always exhorting offices to be better. In a real sense, it is another application of the old motto, "Do as I say, not as I do." For many officers — particularly in the Army, which, being most battered by Vietnam, is given to the most introspection now — the view upward is enough to discourage and dismay.

So-called "ticket punching" is perceived as only one of the problems. Loyalty expected of subordinates is often reserved almost completely for superiors. A "can-do" attitude replaces introspection and sound advice — particularly when the advice would run counter to accepted views.

Of course, there are the wide exceptions to these difficulties, and the prevalence of such practices varies from service to service. But it will be very difficult to change things, for those who have benefited from things as they are often see no compelling reason to change them.

As one lieutenant colonel put it, "By definition, a guy who gets to the top of the system is the system."

Cutting the size of the officer corps will help. That is an approach now being pushed by Senator Stennis and others. Beyond that, it is necessary to devise means to reward honest and honorable men and to thwart the self-centered and self-seeking. Then the services need to be more honest with those within, to set them on productive and rewarding courses, rather than dangle before them illusory goals, such as, that almost anyone can catch the brass ring for the top.

And a system should be devised to pay people at mid-career to get out if they are of limited value to the services rather than forcing people with limited skills to try to hang on, to their own and the service's detriment, until the magic 20 years and retirement.

ELECTION KEY

A Nixon Albatross: Unemployment Rate

By DONALD FINLEY

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Time is beginning to run out on President Nixon's effort to get unemployment rates down to a more reasonable level before the November presidential election.

When Nixon took office in 1969, joblessness was at a 20-year low of 3.3 per cent. It began climbing in 1970 and for the past 19 months has anged from 5.8 to 6.1 per cent, stubbornly defying administration efforts to bring it down.

Early last year the President predicted that his economic policies would reduce unemployment to 4.5 per cent by the middle of 1972, well in advance of his reelection campaign. Joblessness continues to hover near 6 per cent, however, giving Democrats a potentially potent campaign issue.

The administration has abandoned any hopes of reaching the 4.5 per cent unemployment goal by November. But with the economy beginning to pick up, prospects are good for some improvement that might blunt Democratic criticism.

While the unemployment rate has proved difficult to reduce, the number of working Americans has continued to rise as more people enter the job market. Total employment increased 2.3 million in the past year to a record 81.4 million.

Administration officials contend the trend cannot continue because "eventually, you run out of people." They say that when the number of workers begins to level off, the jobless rate will fall.

There were 5,092,000 unemployed in May when the jobless rate was 5.9 per cent for the third consecutive month.

This is the seasonally adjusted figure. There were actually 4,344,000 listed as unemployed in May, but this figure was revised to reflect the usual big jump of more than one million in June when schools let out. The seasonal adjustment process levels out these big monthly variations to provide a more uniform jobless figure from month to month.

On either basis, the trend is being watched closely by both Republican and Democratic strategists because the plight of unemployed workers can influence the political attitude of relatives and friends as well as their own votes.

In addition, most union leaders oppose the President's reelection and can be expected to cite the unemployment rate in urging their members to vote against him. How many will take that advice is another matter, of course.

One politically important category of jobless workers is teen-agers, who will be voting for federal candidates for the first time this year now that the voting age has been lowered to 18.

In May, 15.7 per cent of the teen-agers seeking jobs were idle. That was a total of narly 1.3 million.

Sen. George S. McGovern of South Dakota, the leading contender for the Democratic presidential nomination, has a strong appeal among young voters and expects to get most of these teen-age votes if he gets the nomination at Miami Beach next month.

Blue collar unemployment of 6.8 per cent 2,075,000 workers is nearly twice the white collar rate of 3.6 per cent 1,433,000 workers. Most blue collar workers normally vote Democratic. But some could be frightened off by McGovern's stand on Vietnam, going instead to Nixon or to Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace if he decides to run as a third party candidate again.

Unemployment among white collar workers, who tend to vote Republican, also could mean some problems for Nixon.

One out of every five jobless workers is a Negro 1,031,000 of them, but few blacks are expected to vote for Nixon anyway — unless Wallace winds up on the Democratic ticket.

Beyond that predicting the voting patterns of unemployed workers becomes treacherous in the extreme.

For instance, 548,000 construction workers were idle in May. That was a rate of 12.5 per cent, more than twice that of the rest of the work force. These hard hat workers normally would be expected to vote Democratic with their blue collar colleagues. But many strongly support Nixon because of his tough stand on Vietnam. Many also support Wallace.

Unemployment among professional and technical workers is unusually high at 2.4 per cent. This compares with 1.9 per cent during the last serious recession in 1961.

Many of the 273,000 unemployed workers in this category are engineers and scientists who lost their jobs in defense and aerospace cutbacks. While normally heavily Republican, many may vote against Nixon this time in protest. On the other hand, McGovern's calls for sharp cutbacks in military spending, which would mean fewer defense contracts, could scare some of them away from the Democrats.

There were more than 3.8 million unemployed adults in May, but experts do not consider this as serious as the figures might indicate since less than half of them, or 1.8 million were heads of households. The rest were single persons or spouses trying to earn a second family income.

The 10 states with the highest unemployment rates are Alaska 12.7, Washington 11.1, Connecticut 9.4, Michigan 9.1, Montana 8.9, Maine 8.8, Massachusetts 7.9, Rhode Island 7.8, West Virginia 7.8 and Vermont 7.5. Humphrey won all in 1968 except Alaska, Montana and Vermont.

This Week In The World

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Barring legislative action by Congress or individual states, the late Luis Jose Monge may occupy a unique if unenviable niche in American history.

Blindfolded and clutching a rosary, Monge went to his death in Colorado's gas chamber a little over five years ago. He had taken a number of lives and the state in turn had taken his.

His execution may have been the last in the United States as a result of a Supreme Court decision Thursday outlawing death penalties as cruel and unusual punishment.

But the full implications of the decision were not clear. The majority produced five separate opinions and failed to agree completely that capital punishment would be unconstitutional under all circumstances.

Chief Justice Warren Burger expressed the opinion in a dissent that the death sentence might be permissible if strict standards were spelled out for judges or juries in imposing it.

As anticipated, the 5-4 decision evoked a spate of mixed reactions.

Episcopal Bishop C. Kilmer Myers of San Francisco rejoiced, saying, "This is a decision enhancing the dignity of man, particularly of the poor who in the main have been the victims of this cruel and unusual punishment."

Lt Gov. Lester Maddox of Georgia called it "a license for anarchy, rape and murder. This tribunal is saying you won't pay a price equal to that paid by a murder victim."

For the 600 condemned men in various prisons around the country, it was a day for rejoicing.

At Ohio State Penitentiary where 55 inmates await execution, loud cheers erupted on "death row" when news of the high court decision was announced over the radio.

"The second they heard the announcement the inmates broke out with cheers, shouts and yelling...no security problems, just a noise problem. If the decision had gone the other way, I would be concerned with security," said Warden Harold J. Cardwell.

For Mrs. Mary Dobrolenski, a pretty blonde from Toledo, Ohio, sentenced to the electric chair last week for the shooting deaths of two state troopers, the court decision was like an act of providence.

Her lawyers said that when the 19-year-old mother heard the news she broke down and began "crying and thanking the good Lord."

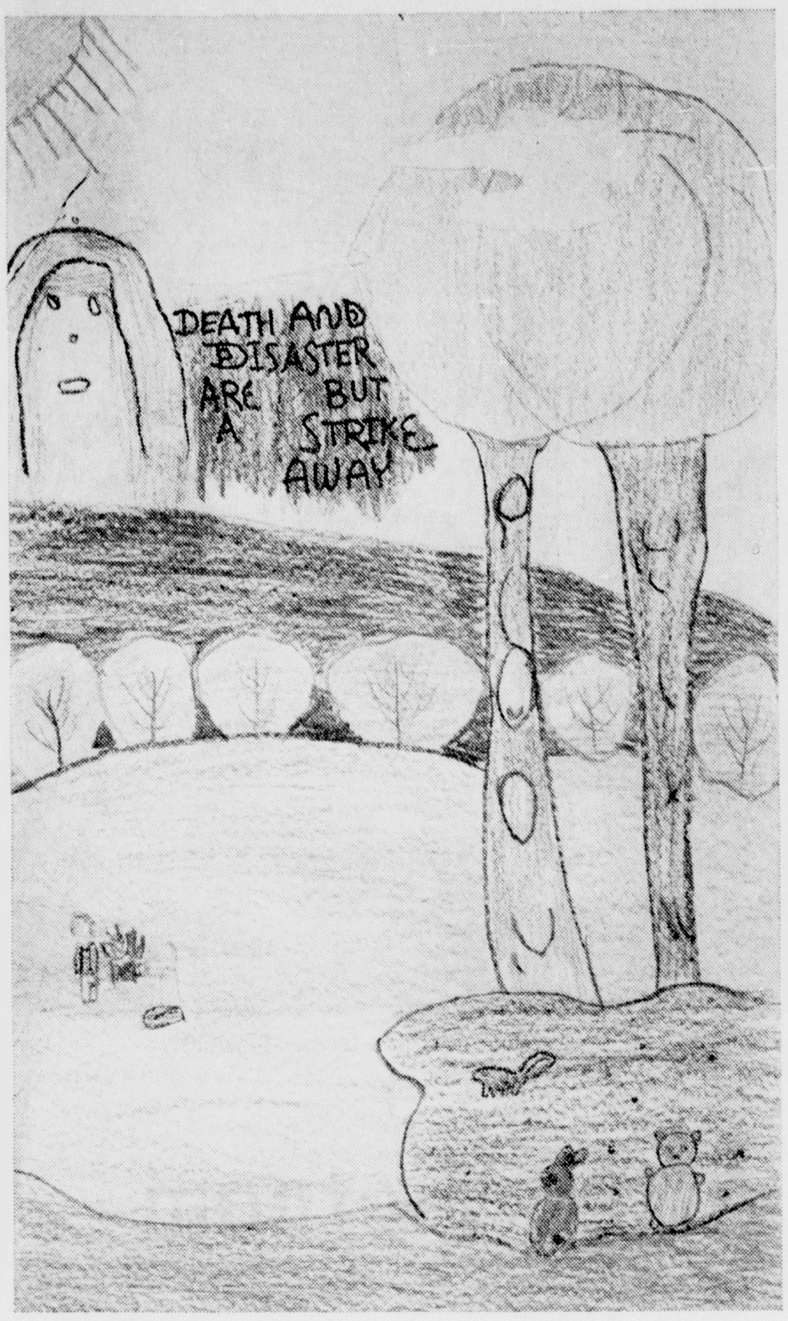
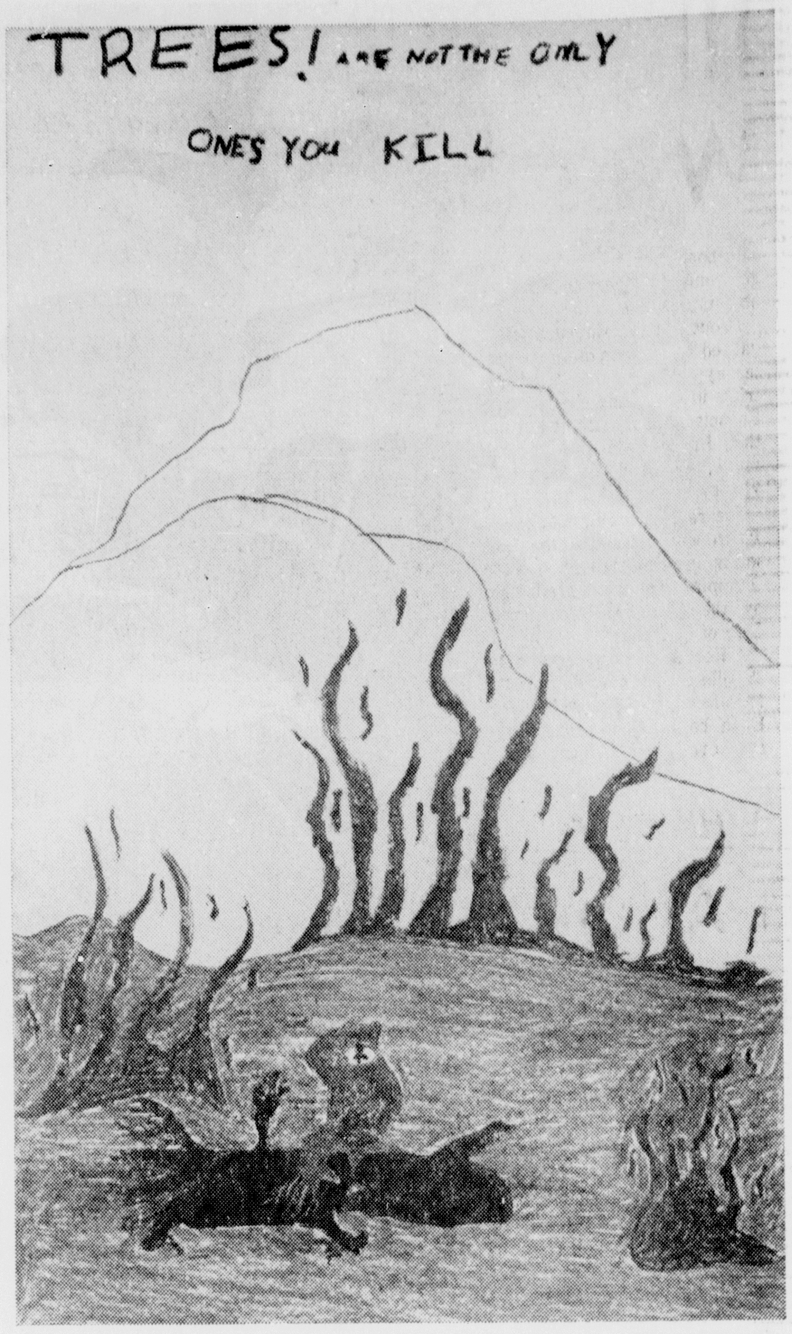
UNDATED — Rampaging floodwaters in 10 eastern seaboard states receded permitting residents in many areas to go back to their homes and begin the task of cleaning up mud and debris. An estimated 130 persons died in the swirling waters spawned by tropical storm Agnes and some $2 billion in damages resulted from the flooding.

BELFAST — The cease-fire set by the Provisional wing of the IRA went into effect and appeared to be generally working.





PETALUMA POSTERS WIN HONORS

Do Environmentalists Ignore Minorities?

By ROBERT C. COWEN
The Christian Science Monitor News Service

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — The cry went up to "save the whales," and United Nations conference delegates joined with hippies in a protest march through Stockholm.

But few of them have heard the quieter, more poignant cry to save the forgotten peoples. It is being voiced here by a small group of American Indians.

Their feathered headdresses and turquoise garments add color to the Nordic scene. They also emphasize a critical human question neglected in the deliberations of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment — will a world bent on making earth's environment safe for "civilization" allow minority people to follow traditional ways of life?

Although some conference documents pay lip service to the diversity of mankind, few delegates have much empathy for what they regard as "backward" modes of life. Instead, the Indians are finding that "white man's indifference comes in many shades of skin."

The swarthy Brazilians who loudly condemn economic "aggression" from the North say nothing of domestic aggression that is pushing Amazon Indians off their land in the name of "development."

The smiling Chinese prefer not to talk about Tibet. Economically progressive Indonesians say little about environmental needs of "primitive" cultures in their islands. Nor do industrially-minded East Africans plead for preservation of Masai or Somali pastoral self-sufficiency or of the bucolic tranquility of Polomo slash-and-burn farmers.

These are the invisible cultures of the earth. Even the most liberally-minded environmentalists here tend to see such peoples as objects of cultural neglect who need to be set straight on the road to "progress." Rarely are they regarded as cultural equals whose traditional ways may include values badly needed by the rest of mankind.

"We fell solidarity with these traditional peoples everywhere," says Kanatakeniate, spokesman for the Mohawk nation of North America. He explained that the Indian term for his nation means "the real people."

"These are the people who love and respect the earth, who live in harmony with their environment," he said. "We would extend that name to include all such people wherever they live on earth."

He added that the term for "white man" includes the implication of people who callously exploit the environment in destructive ways.

It also carries the implication of people who look down upon life-styles they do not understand and which they despise as "primitive." It is this cast of thought that has enabled Christian consciences to turn blind eyes to the persecution of American Indians for centuries, Kanatakeniate noted.

So, he said, he would extend the term for "white man" to include all who have this attitude, wherever they are in the world.

It would shock many a sophisticated African or Asian delegate to know that, from this viewpoint, he appears "white" in his thinking as a European.

The Indians say they have not come here to strike a posture of protest. They have come quietly to plead for respect for traditional ways of life, to urge delegates to provide for such ways in their environmental planning.

They have come also to try to open "civilized" man's blind eye to see that cultures he considers "backward" may have unexpected value for him.

The delegates are much occuped with proposals to save wild animal life and plant life. Their scientific advisers tell them, that for all of their achievements, biologists still are ignorant of many things that wild nature could reveal.

Likewise, says Kanatakeniate, industrial civilization should recognize that, for all of its material achievements, it lacks basic spiritual values that so-called "primitive" life styles could teach. All the Indians here say they believe that neglect of such values underlies the environmental and social disorders challenging civilization today.

And one of the most important of these values, they say, is simply love for man's planetary home and its life forms.

Industrialized man talks of saving the natural environment, but he is afraid of it, observed Ninibah Crawford, another member of the Indian group. "He is afraid of the sun," she said, "so he builds a box, goes inside, and puts an artificial light inside.

"He needs more and more power and resources to sustain that kind of life. And now its destructiveness and pollution threaten to get the better of him."

If allowed to continue to develop in their own way, the Indians say they may help lead industrialized man into the sun again.

Unfortunately, the mammals of the sea have a larger constituency at the conference than do the invisible cultures. But Rolling Thunder from Carlin, Nev., says he places his hope in the young — the young in outlook as well as in age. "They are coming to us more and more and seeing the value in our way of ' life," he said.

Illinois Man Wins Soling

In boat racing, it helps if you go around — rather than into — objects floating in the water.

About a dozen skippers disregarded this commandment yesterday in the U.S. Olympic trials in the soling class on San Francisco Bay, with the result that Bruce Goldsmith of Wilmette, Ill., had an easy 1:07 victory.

The race is the first of seven which will determine the U.S. soling representatives in the Olympics. The trials are hosted by the San Francisco Yacht Club of Belvedere.

A fleet of 36 boats braved 15-25 mile-per-hour winds over the 11-mile course. Thirty finished. Each boat had a skipper and two crewmen. Aiding Goldsmith were Bob Barton, Chicago, and Robert Lansing, Southport, Conn.

Goldsmith took command in the race nearing the first weather mark, and rounded it without difficulty. His closest pursuers, however, were swept into the pylon by strong currents, creating a situation much like Highway 101 at 5 p.m.

When things were finally untangled, Lowell North of San Diego sped away and finished second. Earl Elms of San Diego was third and Warwick Tompkins of Mill Valley fourth.

Jim Coggan of the S.F.Y.C. came in 20th and Jerry Rumsey of Tiburon 21st, although those positions may be changed as a

Three Giant Homers Defeat Dodgers, 8-4

Bryant Pitches Victory

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)— Manager Charlie Fox of the San Francisco Giants has been saying all season his young players would get better.

"When they do, watch out," he warned.

The Los Angeles Dodgers were the latest victims of the Giants fuzzy-cheeked phenoms. Chris Speier, 22, Jim Howarth, 25, and Tito Fuentes, 28, hit homer to power the Giants to an 8-4 victory Friday night. It was their fifth win in the last six games.

Lefthander Ron Bryant, a 25-year-old, picked up his third straight victory and sixth of the year. He gave up 10 hits, most of them after the Giants had built up an early lead.

"You aren't as careful when you're ahead by six runs than you are when you have a one-run lead," Bryant said.

Bryant ran his string of scoreless innings to 23 2-3 before Wes Parker whacked a two-run homer in the sixth inning.

"I think it was quite an accomplishment to go that far," Bryant said. "I was thinking about the goose eggs."

All the Dodger runs came on homers. Chris Cannizzaro hit a two run homer in the eighth inning.

Bryant struck out only one batter but he walked only two.

"With the big lead, I concentrated on getting the ball over. I probably should have thrown more curve balls," he said.

The Giants jumped on Dodger starter Claude Osteen for five runs in the four innings he pitched. All were the result of homers. Speier hit his ninth of the season in the first inning, Howarth hit his first major league homer with Bobby Bonds on base in the third inning, and Fuentes hit his two run shot in the fourth inning.

Speier already has surpassed his homer total for the 1971 season.

"I figure the way I swing, I should hit about 10 a year," Speier said. "But I'm not going to start trying to hit them."

Speier had six fielding chances in the first four innings

WHITE SOX WIN

Allen Tough Against A's

ANAHEIM (UPI) —Call him Richie or Dick Allen, he's still Mr. Poison to the Oakland Athletics.

Feasting on A's pitching, Allen crashed a three-run homer off lefty Ken Holtzman to highlight a five-run first inning Friday night in Chicago as the White Sox edged the A's 6-5. It was Allen's third homer of the four-game series.

The victory allowed the White Sox to take three of the four games and shave the A's lead over runnerup Chicago to four games in the American League West.

Reliever Darold Knowles walked Mike Andrews on a 3-and-2 pitch with the bases loaded and two outs in the 11th inning to force home the winning run.

Holtzman, returning to Chicago for the first time since being traded from the Cubs to Oakland before the 1972 season, couldn't get a man out. He allowed six hits and hit a batter before being replaced by Joe Horlen.

Horlen, Bob Locker and Rollie Fingers then held the White Sox in check for nearly 10 innings. In the 11th, losing pitcher Fingers (5-2) gave up a single and two walks to load the bases. Andrews, who had gone out four straight times, worked the count to 3-and-2 before walking on a ball almost in the dirt.

Chicago starter Stan Bahnsen, who had a five-run cushion, gave up a solo homer to Bill Voss in the second and was forced to leave the game in the fifth when he gave up doubles to Tim Cullen and Bert Campaneris and Joe Rudi's seventh homer of the year to make it 5-4.

The A's tied the game off Terry Forster in the eighth inning on a triple by Mike Epstein and Dave Duncan's sacrifice fly.

THE SHOW IS 'DRAGBUNT'

Colorful Action Of Gals In Marin Softball League

By RON LENT

The story you are about to read is true; but the names were changed to protect the guilty.

The city is Fairfax, Calif.; it is Thursday evening at White Hill School.

This is my beat; I carry a pen. My name is Lent.

And this show is DRAGBUNT.

Certainly, this Women's Slow Pitch Softball league in Marin County will not be the subject of a television series, but to the ladies who participate; it is a really big show.

For instance, the Cookin' Mamas played Fairfax Shell Thursday night at White Hill School, and the ensuing game won by the Mamas, 3-2, actually happened, but the names were changed. . .

Before festivities could begin, it was discovered the pitching mound rubber was loose. The Fairfax Shell manager bolted out there and promptly placed a penny into the ground to steady the rubber. When it was noticed he was alleviating the problem with a one cent piece, a Fairfax Shell player quipped: "so what do you expect him to use; we don't pay him enough to coach our team."

Under a warm summer sky, the Mamas, cheered on by their husbands, children and dogs, took the field amid cigarette smoke and the crackle of popping beer tops on the sidelines.

After a scoreless first inning, the 10-gal Mama team was inspired by a sideline call: "come in and get a few (beers)." With new found spir-

Track Spots In Olympics Up For Grabs

EUGENE, Ore. (UPI)—The 1972 U.S. Olympic track and field team starts taking shape today with the first five finals of the trials, and among those shooting for early berths are Jim Ryun, Jay Silvester and a whole new flock of sprinters.

Finals on the day's schedule include the discus, where Silvester still is king, the 800 meters, where Ryun is running stronger with each passing day, the triple jump, the 100 dash, where anyone could be the winner, and the 20-kilometer walk.

Silvester, an Olympian in 1964 and 1968 and the world record holder, paced qualifiers to the discus final Friday with a throw of 211-2. It was far off his world record of 224-5 but easily the best because the field used new and strange implements.

Ryun, meanwhile, looked like the Ryun of old when he jumped into the lead after 100 meters and then held off closing bids by Marcel Philippe and AAU champ Dave Wottle to win his semifinal heat in 1:47.3.

Richard Wohlhuter, the former Notre Dame star, won the other heat in a faster 1:47.2. Among those who didn't qualify for today's final from that heat were Tom Von Ruden and Juris Luzins, two of America's better half-milers. However, both are still alive in the trials because they are entered in the 1,500 meter run next week along with Ryun, Wottle and Ken Swenson.

The U.S. Olympic Committee has decreed that every semifinalist must take a urinalysis to determine if he has used drugs. For Ryun, it's a tough blow, because he has been on medication since coming to Eugene to protect against a hay fever attack.

Meanwhile, the 100 dash today shapes up as quite an event. They'll run the semifinals first with the first section made up of Norbert Payton, Mel Pender, Willie Deckard, Eddie Hart, Ray Robinson, Warren Edmonson, Steve Riddick and Harrington Jackson.

The second section includes Ivory Crockett, Jon Young, James Amerison, Robert Taylor, Gerald Tinker, Marshall Dill, Herb Washington and Larry Burton.

AT WIMBLEDON

Easy Net Win By Chris Evert

WIMBLEDON, England (UPI)—Chris Evert, the teenage crowd favorite for the Wimbledon tennis crown, cruised into the women' quarterfinals today with a 6-3, 6-2 victory over Julie Anthony of Malibu, Calif.

The 17-year-old Miss Evert, outfitted in pink panelled tennis attire, continually put her drives within six inches of the baseline with strength and precision to beat her opponent.

Those sideline shots, plus a sprinkling of elusive lobs allowed Chris to break Miss Anthony's service three times in the first set and twice in the second set.

Miss Evert, of Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., fourth-seeded in this event on the basis of the American reputation she built last year and in 1972, zeroed in her strokes as if they were radar-controlled. Her serves and returns drew tremendous applause from the crowd which anticipates seeing Miss Evert in the finals.

Patti Hogan of La Jolla, Calif., qualified for a quarterfinal berth against Miss Evert by beating Pam Teeguarden of Los Angeles, 6-3, 6-4.

The American tide continued to overwhelm the opposition as Rosemary Casals of San Francisco ousted Betty Stove of the Netherlands, 6-3, 6-2, and Nancy Richey Gunter of San Angelo, Texas, eliminated Kerry Harris of Australia, 6-3, 7-5. The triumphs set up a Casals-Gunter quarter-final match.

The U.S. suffered its first defeat of the day when Francoise Durr of France beat Laura Du Pont of Charlotte, N.C., 6-1, 6-2.

Defending champion Evonne Goolagong of Australia whipped Olga Morozova of Russia, 3-6, 6-1, 9-7, and Virginia Wade of Britain stopped Helen Gourlay of Australia, 6-3, 6-2, in other women's fourth round singles matches.

Miss Hogan, who has been on the tourney trail for 18 months, could be the girl who stops Miss Everts' thrust toward the British title.

Six weeks ago Patti left the court in tears during the Guildford tournament following a temperamental outburst which led to her appearing before the disciplinary committee of the British Lawn Tennis Association.

A loss of form had led to several earlier temperamental outbursts, but after her appear-

Boccabella Homers But Expos Falter

By U. P. INTERNATIONAL

Terra Linda's John Boccabella may have difficulty cracking the Montreal Expos' starting lineup but the utility player apparently makes the most of each opportunity.

And Friday night in Montreal was no exception as the Marin Catholic High School graduate blasted a sixth inning home run off New York Mets rookie lefthander Jon Matlack.

Boccabella, who also singled in his four at-bats, was in good power company, for Mets' center fielder Willie Mays also belted a homer as New York won, 7-3.

In other National League action Chicago edged Pittsburgh, 4-3, St. Louis whipped Philadelphia 4-1, Atlanta beat Houston 5-2, San Francisco outslugged Los Angeles 8-4 and San Diego beat Cincinnati 4-3.

Earl Williams slammed two homers and a double to drive in three runs to power Atlanta over Houston. Williams hit a solo homer in the fifth inning to break a scoreless duel between Ron Reed and Ken Forsch and slammed a two-run blow in the ninth. He scored behind Hank Aaron, who had broken a 2-2 tie minutes earlier with a single that drove in Ralph Garr.

Jose Cruz hit his first home

Golfer Hinson Leads Cleveland Open By 1

CHAGRIN FALLS, Ohio (UPI)—The last time Larry Hinson won a Professional Golfers Association tour event was in 1969 at the Greater New Orleans Open in his rookie season.

Since then, his best cash year was 1970 when he finished eighth on the money list with $120,897. But he suffered through a dismal 1971 with a shoulder ailment that started a downward trek.

That trek apparently ended Friday when Hinson played his best round "since I can't remember when," carded seven birdies and a bogey to take the first round lead in the $150,000 Cleveland Open golf tournament witp a six under par 31-34—65.

Hinson, 27, of Douglas, Ga., had four birdies on the front nine and three more on the back nine at the par 71, 6,907-yard Tanglewood Country Club to squeak past a charging John Jacobs, who was one stroke back at 66 moving into today's second round.

Veteran George Knudson was another shot off the pace with Bob Lewis of Warren, Ohio, and rookie Mike Span, 22, who made his best showing on the tour thanks to four birdies on the final six holes.

Lanny Wadkins, Miller Barber, Grier Jones, Brien Allin and David Graham were at three under par 68's, while Bobby Nichols, George Archer, Doug Sanders, J. C. Snead, Bob Wynn, Chuck Thorpe and Tom Weiskopf were at two under par 69. Napa's Ron Cerrudo had a 71.

Weiskopf slammed the tour's 17th hole in one Friday when he hit a five iron shot three feet past the pin on the 196-yard seventh hole and it spun back into the cup. It was the fourth of his career and his second in Cleveland Open play, the first coming in 1966.

McLAIN BELIEVES:

Trade Is Like A 'Shot In Arm'

HOUSTON (UPI)—Denny McLain, back in the major leagues after five weeks at Birmingham, Ala., said Friday night it was like a "shot of adrenalin" to be traded to the Atlanta Braves.

McLain reported to the Braves prior to their series opener with the Houston Astros and pitched batting practice for 15 minutes. He did it to keep in shape because it was his turn to pitch at Birmingham, where the Oakland A's had sent him five weeks ago.

"Those five weeks seemed like a lifetime," McLain said. "I'm just elated to be back in the big league. I'm happy to be with Atlanta because my family lives in Florida and I can see them.

"I think being in the National League will help me because the players haven't seen me," he said. "I ought to have an advantage for a while because they won't know what I can throw. But it's still gonna take stuff to win."

McLain, 28, who had bounced from Detroit to Washington to Oakland before landing in the minors, said his arm had come back in the last week or 10 days. He has pitched complete games in three of his last four starts and went eight innings the other time to finish with a 3-3 mark.

"My arm hasn't felt this good since 1965 or '66," he said, referring to the years when he won 16 and 20 games respectively. He won 31 in 1968 and 24 in 1969 before becoming mixed up physically and mentally.

He said he has regained his strength at Birmingham and the trade improved his mental attitude.

JACK HANLEY

Southern Gentleman With A Booming Bat

Ed Goodson is a southern gentleman, a native of Virginia where he was born 24 years ago. By the time he was graduated from Fries High in Fries, Va., major league scouts listed him high in their baseball ratings. That was understandable because in his senior year he batted .585 and was named player of the year in Virginia District No. 6.

Goodson went to East Tennessee State University and was chosen shortstop on the National Collegiate Athletic Association College All-America second team after batting .343 in 1968, the year the Giants selected him No. 1 in the June special phase of baseball's free agent draft.

GOODSON TEMPORARILY interrupted his college education to sign with the Giants but continued to attend college during baseball's off-season and now is a senior at East Tennessee. Goodson's first pro experience was in the Pioneer League and he hit .444 in 1969. He hit .314 in 1970 in the California League at Fresno. Last year in the Coast League he hit .294 at Phoenix.

When the Giants called him up May 19 this year, Goodson was leading the Coast League with a .389 batting average. The Giants would have called him up April 18 when Willie McCovey's right arm was broken but at that time Goodson's left leg was bothering him — tendinitis. Goodson jammed the leg a year ago diving for a ball at Phoenix. He's been to several doctors who have advised Goodson that whirlpool therapy may correct the leg problem.

HOWEVER, THE leg hasn't kept him from filling in at first base for McCovey and it hasn't hampered his classic left-handed swing at bat. When McCovey's right arm healed in remarkably fast fashion and he returned to action June 3, Goodson sat down, saying "I never expected to play ahead of him." When McCovey pulled a groin muscle June 23 in San Diego, the same place where he broke his right arm, Goodson went back to first.

In the June 24-25-26 games, Goodson batted an even .400 (6-for-15) and Charlie Fox said "I just wish I could find a regular place for him in the lineup." The June 24-25-26 games were especially noteworthy because they marked the first time this season that the Giants had won three-in-a-row.

"I'VE NEVER seen a smoother swing than Goodson's," said Fox. "He is always in control of his bat. In Monday's game against the Braves, Ron Reed tried to put Goodson off balance with one of his palm pitches. Goodson stroked it in a perfectly timed swing for a double down the right field line. It was the key hit in Ron Bryant's 3-0 shutout."

Fox not only admires Goodson's batting ability but the manager of the Giants loves the attitude of the 6-3, 180, Virginian. "He's a real team man," said Fox.

Junior Golf Crown Won By Bricker

After playing 35 holes yesterday for the heck of it, Jeff Bricker got down to business on the 36th and final hole and defeated Mark Hillsinger of South San Francisco, 1-up, to win the Examiner San Francisco Junior Golf Championship.

The 17-year-old student at Tamalpais High in Mill Valley parred the last hole at Lincoln Park in San Francisco, culminating a day that saw him go 4-up on the morning 18 at Harding Park, then slip back into a tie.

Bricker eagled the 11th hole at Lincoln, chipping in from 90 feet for a two, but Hillsinger chipped in from 50 feet on the same hole.

Two other Marinites advanced to flight finals. Lee Peterson of Terra Linda won the sixth flight over Bart Corfee, 2 and 1, while fellow Terra Lindan Greg Cudworth lost in the second flight to Ken Gilliam, 2-up.

2 NOVATO BOYS SET RECORD

"Most of our friends thought we were crazy at the beginning. I don't know what they think now. I just woke up."

Those were the words of Michael Martin, 14, of Novato, as he stood on weary feet, grasping the telephone in an aching hand. He and friend Mark Walker, 15, also of Novato, had just laid claim to the world's record for continuous table tennis playing.

The two youngsters played for 33 hours in the basement family room of Mike's house, 144 San Felipe Way, from 9 a.m. Wednesday to 6 p.m. Thursday. Mark won the series, 113 games to 110, beating the old mark by an hour.

Family Bowling A Winner

Like son, like father.

Ed Henry and his father Ted showed winning form at Greenbrae Lanes Wednesday night, rolling 686 and 616 series, respectively in the Adult-Junior League competition.

The younger Henry, 30, who receives help from his retired father in the plumbing business, notched games of 195, 279 and 212.

The pair, in besting its youthful rivals, truly, if only for that Wednesday night, separated the men from the boys.

ANOTHER SUCCESS STORY. Berkeley bowler Helen Duval, who carries a fine 209 average, held a one day clinic for women at Country Club Bowl in San Rafael Monday and 160 pupils attended.

Mrs. Duval, one of the nation's top woman bowlers, was pleased by turnout and is determined to come back at a future date. The veteran kegler stressed fundamentals in trying to help the gals increase the women's national bowling average of 132. With her kind of tutoring, the rise in average can be expected.

JUNIORS RULE AT COUNTRY CLUB BOWL. San Rafael jucior bowlers Rich McPherson, 20, and Kent Dlugokenski, 17, proved their worth in competition this week by being among the top bowlers at Country Club Bowl this week. McPherson collected a fine 684, and Dlugokenski took a 604.

"It's better for him to play baseball," said Dr. Willis Hurst of the Emory University School of Medicine in Atlanta, Ga.

A. L. ROUNDUP

Martin's Boast Is Down His Throat

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Billy Martin's boast that the Detroit Tigers "won" the American League pennant the day Baltimore traded Frank Robinson may have to be modified to "we'll win the pennant when we learn how to beat the Orioles."

The Orioles have been playing so far this season in a style unbecoming to three-time AL champions but are only one game behind Detroit in the Eastern Division because they've beaten the Tigers seven times in 10 meetings.

The Orioles shoved Martin's words down his throat again Friday night when they opened a four-game series in Detroit with a 3-2 victory. Pat Dobson, who is not one of Martin's favorite pitchers, pitched a four-hitter and the Orioles' winning run reached base on a strikeout-passed ball and scored during a double play.

The Chicago White Sox edged the Oakland Athletics, 6-5, in 11 innings, the Minnesota Twins defeated the Kansas City Royals, 2-0, the New York Yankees beat the Cleveland Indians, 1-0, and the Texas Rangers downed the California Angels, 7-3, in other AL games. Milwaukee at Boston was rained out.

Run-producing doubles by Bobby Darwin and Eric Soderholm in the seventh inning and Ray Corbin's six-hitter enabled the Twins to snap the Royals' five-game winning streak. Corbin, who scored his fourth straight victory and first career shutout, didn't allow a runner past second base and struck out three.

Horace Clarke walked and eventually scored on Roy White's single with two out in the ninth giving the Yankees their victory over Gaylord Perry and the Indians.

The Rangers ended a four-game losing streak with the help of consecutive homers by Ted Ford and Larry Biittner in the fifth inning. Ford also had a double and a single and scored two other runs as Rich Hand squared his record at 5-5. Andy Kosco homered for the Angels.

and then none the rest of the night.

"I hope they hit the ball to me every time," he said.

Speier put together a double play that got Bryant out of trouble in the fourth inning.

Howarth was ecstatic over his homer.

"I didn't even watch it once I knew it was over the fence," he said. "Hitting homers isn't my style. I'm a line drive hitter. All I want is a chance to play and help the team."

Fox felt the big early lead foiled the Dodger offense.

"They can't bunt or steal bases when they are behind by a bunch of runs," he said.

The Giants are now 4-4 for the season with the Dodgers.

Meanwhile, a San Francisco newspaper's published report yesterday that Giants' owner Horace Stoneham might be thinking of selling the club was denied.

"Nothing to it," a Giant spokesman said yesterday, "the boss (Stoneham) is working harder to rebuild the team."

Greenbrae Netter In Doubles Win

Diane DeMartini of Greenbrae kept the day from being totally black for Marin County tennis players yesterday when she teamed with Lisa Nard to win a semi-final match in the girls 14 age bracket of the California State Junior Tennis Championships at the San Jose Swim and Racquet Club.

Miss DeMartini and Miss Nard defeated Sandra Collins and Elizabeth Smith, 6-3, 6-3.

Cary Stansbury of Tiburon was defeated twice, losing in boys 14 singles semis to Roger Greene, 6-4, 7-6, and falling with Rodney Lee in 14 doubles semis to Matthew Horwich and Jeff Robbins, 6-4, 6-4.

Dan Tierney of Tiburon and Eric Lee lost in boys 16 doubles quarter-finals to Earl Hassler and Peter Morris, 6-3, 6-2. Bee Kilgore of Tiburon and Lele Forood lost in girls 18 doubles to Joy and Jill Schwikert, 6-1, 6-2.

ance before the disciplinary committee, Stanley Hawkins, former chairman of the BLTA, took her aside and talked about her game.

"He told me to leave my left hand on the racket slightly longer before completing the stroke. I had nothing to lose and since then I've lost only one match. It's working and I'm a lot happier," she said.

Since the talking to Patti, whose only trip home was after Forest Hills last year, has won the Surbiton grass court title, finished runner-up to Joyce Williams in the Northern England Open at Manchester and made her Wightman Cup debut a winning one.

Patti is acknowledged as a great tactician. She has analyzed Miss Evert's game and feels she has the equipment to beat her now.

"In a couple of years it probably will be different, but right now Chris stays rooted to the baseline and this is my game. With a bit more experience she'll have the confidence to come to the net and then we all had better look out," she said.

Miss Evert only survived 8-6, 8-6, against fifth ranked Mary Ann Eisel of St. Louis, Mo., because her opponent made so many unforced errors and served 12 double faults. It was like Forest Hills all over again where Mary Ann blew six match points last year.

If the form book works out, the United States should have five girls in the last eight after today's fourth round. Also favored to progress are Billie Jean King, Nancy Gunter and Rosie Casals.

In the bottom half of the men's draw, Jim Connors of Beleville, Ill., and Tom Gorman of Seattle, Wash. will try to join Stan Smith, the top seed and favorite, in the last eight.

Connors should get by Francois Jauffret of France, but Gorman, beaten semifinalist last year, will have his work cut out against second seeded Ilie Nastase of Romania.

Politicians Fear Move By Colts

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

BALTIMORE — Maryland's elected officials don't much care who owns the Baltimore Colts as long as they stay here.

Gov. Marvin Mandel, shaken by rumors that the Colts' franchise would be swapped for the Los Angeles Rams, called National Football League commissioner Pete Rozelle to check on the situation.

"He assured me the franchise will stay in Baltimore," Mandel said.

Colts' owner Carroll Rosenbloom is in the midst of a deal to swap his NFL franchise for the Los Angeles Rams if and when that team is purchased by Skokie, Ill., businessman Robert F. Irsay for a reported $19 million.

SOFTBALL

its, though not from any brew, the Mamas drew a run, not in their stockings but on the scoreboard, evening the tally at 1.

The inning was also punctuated by left fielder Shirley's first putout. After squeezing a flyball in her glove, she exclaimed: "That's it; I've caught my first one!"

An inning later, a Mama named Shelley, feigning scaredness when batting, shook her lon-g-g legs at the plate as the male fans looked on intently.

While humor was present, there was no laughing when a Mama first basewoman made a fine stab at a dying quail pop fly near the first base line halfway towards home plate. She raced in and caught the sinking ball, then hurdled the sideline observers when she could not stop. The play drew generous applause from all.

When the Mamas batted, the fine base running form of their catcher became quite noticable. In trying to beat out an infield bounder, the long-legged athlete stre-t-ch-e-d a leg across the bag — a stride late. While returning to the dugout, a male fan asked: "Have you ever taken ballet?" She replied by emulating the leaping gyrations of a graceful ballerina.

The graceful actions of the pert athletes were evident in other domains that night. Case in point: a collision at first base when a Mama was ruled out after colliding with the Fairfax first basewoman. "Oh, I'm sorry," the defender apologized shyly.

It was likely she was "sorry," but the evening was not. All present seemingly enjoyed the closely contested seven-inning affair.

The game itself and the individual performances will probably not be recorded amongst the greatest sporting moments in Marin County history, yet competitive spirit, sportsmanship, and personal enjoyment derived by the participants ranks equally with that derived from any endeavor recorded in any sports hall of fame.

Some Exceptions To Rules On Finessing With Queen Out

NORMAL RULE

The normal rule is to play the ace and king. However, in this deal to safeguard the contract you lead a trump to dummy's king and return a trump to try a finesse with the jack.

When you take the finesse, the contract is assured no matter which opponent has the queen of spades.

CAN'T BE STOPPED

If the finesse succeeds, as the cards are shown, you draw the last trump with your ace and run the clubs, thus making an overtrick. Even if the finesse happens to lose, the opponents could take only one trump and two diamonds; they couldn't stop you from getting one discard on a club.

NORMAL PLAY LOSES

The normal play of the trump suit loses the contract. You play the ace and king of trumps and then start on the clubs. East ruffs the third club, before you can discard anything, and pushes the jack of diamonds through you. This gives the defenders three diamond tricks, enough to defeat the contract.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner bids one spade, and the next player passes.

You hold:
♠ - Q 10 9
♥ - 8 5 4 2
♦ - J 10 9 7
♣ - 10 5

What do you say?

ANSWER: Pass.

The hand is very nearly, but not quite, worth a raise in spades. Change one of the clubs to a small spade, so that you have four spades and only one club, and you would raise to two spades instead of passing.

Downtown Art Festival Is Out

Sausalito's annual Labor Day Arts Festival will not be held downtown as had been planned, the Sausalito Arts Association has decided.

Shelagh Considine, director of the city's art center, said the association agreed Wednesday it would be too difficult to hold the event in Municipal Parking Lot No. 3. (The city council approved a plan for a downtown festival earlier this month.)

The association also thought a festival in that area might create parking and traffic congestion problems, according to Miss Considine.

The decision means the event will probably be staged either on the Central School playground or the art center property on Nevada Street.

Gray Hits Clark On Remarks

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (UPI) — Echoing the late J. Edgar Hoover, acting FBI director L. Patrick Gray III Friday accused former Attorney General Ramsey Clark and other law enforcement critics of making monstrous accusations against the police.

Gray criticized Clark, a Democrat, for his recent statement to the Congressional Black Caucus that American police departments were engaged in a program "to control blacks and other minorities instead of protecting them against the crime that often wracks their neighborhoods."

Hoover, whom Gray succeeded last May 4, once called Clark "a jellyfish". Gray made his remarks in a speech prepared for the state convention of California Exchange Clubs in which he said he thought the subject should be discussed "from a professional standpoint."

"The viewpoint expressed by these critics ignores the magnitude of the crime problem in the United States," Gray said. "It ignores the obvious corollary that a society with this level of lawlessness is losing the very freedom that it is supposed to secrue.

"Under these circumstances, law enforcement personnel should be congratulated, not shamed, in the pursuance of their duty," Gray declared.

He also took umbrage with a New Yorker magazine article in which writer Richard Harris claims that programs to control crime are really programs to "Keep Negroes in their place."

"On behalf of all law enforcement agencies throughout the country, I simply cannot overstate the outrage with which I reject these monstrous accusations," Gray said. "To equate law enforcement with repression is one of the most dangerous threats to a free society."

Britain's Heath Faces A Battle

LONDON (UPI)—Prime Minister Edward Heath's two-year-old Conservative party government has reached its half-way mark. Now it faces a battle for survival.

On the credit side it almost certainly will lead Britain into the European Common Market on Jan 1, 1973.

But a daunting flood of problems threatens to engulf it. Just a few of them are soaring inflation, continued high unemployment, mushrooming strikes and near-civil war in Northern Ireland.

Two years ago, on June 19, 1970, Edward Heath—then almost a political unknown—was swept to power at the head of a new Conservative party government.

His victory ended 5-1-2 years of Labor party rule.

British parliaments are elected for a maximum five-year term. Theoretically, the Heath government could stay in office until June, 19, 1975.

But governments in this country rarely last that long. Usually, before the end of five years the prime minister of the day decides to seek a new mandate in parliamentary general elections.

Politicians and observers are taking more or less for granted that Heath will do this sometime in 1974 and that his government, therefore, has reached the half-way point.

"Looking back over the last two years," wrote Derek Marks, chief political commentator for the London Daily Express, "there is a great deal upon which the government can congratulate itself. There is also a great deal which should encourage grave and anxious heart-searching."

Heath's Conservative party central office recently listed some of the government's achievements on the credit side — tax cuts totaling $7.8 billion, reforms of the antiquated British taxation system, reform of labor-management relations, tighter immigration controls, reorganization of the system of government, higher old-age pensions and more money for elementary schools.

But the Conservative party list did not mention still skyrocketing wage-price inflation, one of the worst strike records in the Western world and the fact there still are most than 900,000 jobless.

The Sunday Times of London, which usually supports the government, commented recently. "Two years of traditional economic problems have changed Mr. Heath and his government from prophets and zealots into men facing the tide of uncontrollable events with a series of unreliable expedients."

Heath himself admitted recently he is disappointed at his government's inability so far to tame inflation and unemployment.

But he still is optimistic about the future.

"What we have got to do now," he said in a recent interview, "is to expand our capacity.

"I want to give an impetus to a complete regeneration of the whole of our industrial capacity," he said. "That's what we are about. I still don't think people realize quite how big an enterprise this is."

The Heath government took a heavy beating in local government elections this spring. Conservative party leaders attributed this to anger of the voters at the government's inability to curb unemployment and soaring prices.

But recent public opinion "straw" polls showed it only 6 per cent behind the opposition Labor party in popularity.

The last Labor party government under Harold Wilson took just as bad a beating in local government elections and trailed by as much as 27 per cent in opinion polls when it was at its own half-way mark.

The Sunday Times commented that the Conservative government's best hope for the future lies in the fact that the opposition Labor party is divided and hardly ready to make a serious challenge.

"It is perhaps some consolation to the new Tory (Conservative) pragmatisists to face a party which is even less equipped than they are to change the course of history," the Sunday Times wrote recently.

Horseshoe Tournament Barb Tossed

When it comes to horseshoes and the honor of the town, Corte Madera is all in favor of women's lib.

Women's lib for Larkspur, that is.

In a letter to Larkspur's mayor and councilmen, Corte Madera mayor Holmes S. Norville said that he's heard Larkspur intends to use its "usual underhanded tricks" by using alumni councilmen for the annual horseshoe tournament between Larkspur and Corte Madera city councils on Monday.

While calling former Mayor Earl O'Grady, a rumored substitute, "a fine figure," Norville made a pitch for Larkspur, using Councilman Joan Sestak on its team instead.

He offered Mrs. Sestak the use of Corte Madera Town Park's ladies horseshoe range, and polished off his pitch by adding:

"We do think Mrs. Sestak does provide a certain amount of charm and beauty to the occasion which is otherwise reduced to the ringer level."

No answer has yet been received from the Larkspur council horseshoe pitchers.

Purchase Feasibility Urged By Districts

The Independent-Journal erred Thursday in a story on the Marin Municipal Water District which stated that the Stinson Beach county water and fire protection districts had asked MMWD to purchase Stinson Beach Water Co.

The two districts actually have asked the water district to study the feasibility of such a purchase.

LEWIS WEHRER of Santa Venetia works on his display board for the eighth annual Art and Hobby Show of the Pacific Service Employees Assn. that opens tomorrow in Pacific Gas and Electric Co.'s divisional headquarters building in San Rafael and runs through July 9. On the board Wehrer will be showing handicraft items he fashions from used horseshoes, railroad spikes and other discards. His creations range from letter and candle holders to lamps and chandeliers, and he has finished some 80 objects in the eight years he has enjoyed the hobby.

Old Horseshoes And Railroad Spikes

These Provide Marin Man With Materials For Hobby

By DON KEOWN

Like Fourth of July parades and band concerts, horseshoes and railroad ties sound like something out of the American past.

But both are still very much around, serving their time-honored purposes. And even for those that have been cast aside as used and worn, a Marin hobbyist has found another and novel use.

Lewis E. Wehrer of 125 Mabry Way, Santa Venetia, fashions chandeliers, candleholders and other objects from discarded horseshoes and spikes.

IT IS A hobby with which he has been occupied now for eight years, working with welding equipment, drills and buffers in the garage at his home. In that time, he estimates, he has completed some 80 items, most of which he has given away to friends.

Some of the products of his unusual craft will be on display at the Pacific Service Employees Assn. eighth annual Art and Hobby Show to open tomorrow and to run through July 9 in the demonstration room at Pacific Gas and Electric Co.'s divisional office building at Third and Brooks, San Rafael. The show will be open daily noon to 5 p.m. except on the Fourth of July when it will be closed, and on Friday when it will remain open until 9 p.m.

PG & E employees from throughout the division will be showing the products of their hobbies and skills.

IT WILL MARK the second time Wehrer, a Pacific Gas and Electric Co. electric trouble man who answers emergency calls and who has been with the utility firm 24 years, has participated in the employee show. Last year he failed to cop a prize. "I am hoping to do better this time," he smiles.

Prize or no prize, the display board filled with useful objects made by Wehrer from horseshoes, spikes and other materials headed for the junkyard is certain to catch the interest of show goers.

Until he began doing this kind of thing eight years ago, Wehrer says, he had felt no particular interest in crafts. "I had done a little welding on construction, but not much," he adds.

BUT, HE SAYS, "I got to thinking about horseshoes and what might be done with them. And I started playing around with them, welding them together. It was all my own idea, not something I had seen elsewhere and borrowed."

His first finished items were simple objects, he recalls — coat hangers and flower pot holders. He graduated to more difficult projects, and now his prize piece is the horseshoe chandelier that hangs in the Le Chalet Basque restaurant not far from his home.

Used Discards Are Converted Into Functional Objects For His Friends

In his garage he has both a small acetylene torch and a simple 240-volt electric welder.

The gas welding, he says, is for bending and shaping, and for use on the lighter materials. Otherwise, the electric welder is faster and easier to use.

WEHRER GETS his used horseshoes in lots of 100 or 200 at a time from ferriers with whom he has made arrangements for their discards that would be of no use to them. "In a lot of 100, you might find 20 or 25 that are usable," Wehrer says. "The others are too worn down to be of any use."

The horseshoes he uses, he stresees, are the real things — the ones worn by horses, not the ones pitched in the game of horseshoes that has been a tradition of small-town America for generations.

There was a time, when shoes came largely from draft or work horses, not riding horses, that the genuine horseshoes were large enough for pitching. Now the horseshoes tossed at the stakes — "a great game," says Wehrer — are especially made for that purpose.

Today virtually all shoes worn by horses in this country have come from Japan.

"THEY ARE made of a softer iron than the old American-made horseshoes which got to be too expensive," Wehrer explains. "Horses walk on so much pavement, gravel and rock today that even the hardest shoes wear down rapidly. So it is more economical to buy the softer, cheaper Japanese-made shoe, and then replace them more often."

Burro shoes, longer and narrower than horseshoes, are especially suited to napkin-holders, Wehrer notes.

He finds himself working more and more these days with old railroad spikes, sometimes alone, sometimes in conjunction with horseshoes, sometimes along with other materials. "Most of the spikes I am using right now come from the old Tiburon roundhouse, giving the pieces an added historic interest," Wehrer says.

THE CHANDELIER at the Le Chalet restaurant represents about 12 hours of work on Wehrer's part. It has been in place for a year, "and," says Wehrer, "they tell me it is quite a conversation piece."

With the help of the hames from an old harness, Wehrer fashioned a dressing table mirror with holders for candles on both sides — harkening back to early-day American furniture.

Another project in which Wehrer takes special pride is a chandelier in the shape of a wagon wheel.

Log chain sometimes ends up as part of his chandeliers.

VIRTUALLY ALL of these creations wind up as gifts to friends. There is virtually none of his work to be seen in Lew Wehrer's own home.

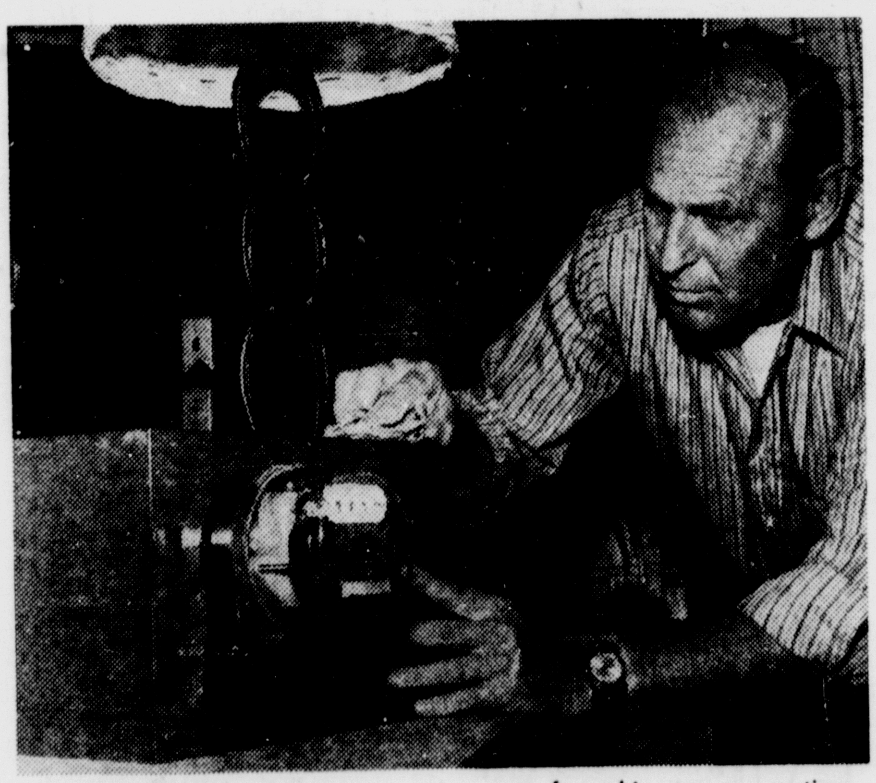
Wehrer explains with a smile: "My wife Margie doesn't especially care for the things I turn out. She thinks I'm a little nuts, spending so much time on them."

Then he adds philosophically: "But other people seem to like them. And I get a lot of satisfaction and relaxation, working on them. To me, there seems to be something downright American about horseshoes and railroad spikes, and about putting those kinds of materials to real use, instead of just throwing them away."

The Fourth of July holiday week then seems an appropriate time for Lew Wehrer's work to be on display. The public can visit the PG & E office building and the employee show and judge for themselves whether Lew or Margie Wehrer is right about the things he makes in his unusual hobby. And they can view as well the work of scores of other craftsmen and hobbies whose leisure-time pursuits are also entirely in keeping with the American tradition of busy hands and inventive minds.

A MONKEY WRENCH and some horseshoes make up most of this highly original candleholder that its creator, Lew Wehrer, calls "the doughboy," steel helmet and all.

THE PRIZE PIECE for Lew Wehrer among the many objects he has made from horseshoes is that chandelier that hangs in the Le Chalet Basque restaurant not far from his Santa Venetia home. Here restaurant owner Raymond Coscarat makes an adjustment in the chain that holds the conversation-piece chandelier.



AN ANTIQUE electric meter, a memento from his own occupation, has been incorporated by Pacific Gas and Electric Co. troubleshooter Lew Wehrer into this lamp that also includes some of his favorite materials, horseshoes.

Religious Liberty — The American Experiment

"The Congress shall make no law regarding the establishment or religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," specified our Founding Fathers in the First Amendment to the Constitution of this new nation.

The bell of religious freedom first tolled among English-speaking peoples one day in the year 1612, according to two Biblical scholars on the faculty of Marin's Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary at Strawberry Point.

The historic scene, as re-created by Dr. William A. Carleton, dean emeritus and retiring professor of church history at the seminary, and Dr. C. Arthur Insko, professor of Christian ethics, seemed inauspicious enough — a lone messenger making his way through the narrow and noisy streets of London, England, bearing a small gift for His Majesty, King James I.

The gift was a copy of a small, inobtrusive volume bearing the strange title, "A Short Declaration of the Mystery of Iniquity Unviled." And with its presentation, its author, Thomas Helwys, moved one step closer to imprisonment as the first martyr for the cause of complete religious liberty among English-speaking peoples.

HELWYS, LEADING member of the church in Spittlefields, England, often referred to as the first Baptist church on English soil, had written a work filled with inflammatory language and sharp invective. He launched a scathing and blistering attack on churches and institutions whose beliefs he differed, and was especially caustic in his criticism of the Puritans whom he accused of inconsistency in staying with what he described as an "apostate church" while acknowledging the unscripturalness of the ecclesiastical system of the state church.

Helwys' book also was directed against the Separatists who had left the Church of England.

Despite that departure, the Separatists' basis for membership had remained baptism in the Church of England, which Helwys had denounced so vehemently. So he now denounced the Separatists as well for continuing the state church practice of infant baptism.

In spite of Helwys' bitter disagreement with other church groups and religious policies of his day, "This amazing book was the first publication in the English language asserting a revolutionary teaching of religious liberty for everyone, regardless of religion or belief, according to Dr. Carleton, who adds: "It is somewhat startling to find running through the book a plea for religious liberty."

The revolutionary Helwys further asserted that no civil power should have authority to molest even heretics in their religious beliefs and practices. Helwys died in prison. But, says Carleton, his assertion that "the king is a mortal man and hath no control over the immortal souls of his subjects" was soon being echoed by hundreds of other persons.

A MERE 77 years passed before the Toleration Act was passed by the British Parliament and many ugly features of religious oppression came to an end. The Act fell far short of granting religious liberty, Carleton notes, but a beginning had been made.

It is a "sad commentary" on Christianity that proponents of the religion have not historically always been on the side of "liberty for all," Carleton observes.

"Indeed," he says, "it is an indictment of institutional Christianity that nearly 1,600 years after the death of Jesus Christ, a plea for 'soul liberty' should have seemed so radical as did the one expressed by Helwys, particularly in a country that had been nominally Christian for at least a millenium."

Jesus Christ inaugurated his ministry with a "message of freedom," Carleton continues in his historical narrative. Christ's first text in the synagogue at Nazareth was: "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath annointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to proclaim release to the captives, the recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty those that are bruised." (Luke 4:18)

CARLETON CLAIMS that while Jesus did not specify religious liberty, the essence of religious liberty comes from that message. "I believe Christ favored religious liberty in keeping with the Biblical stance that man is free to choose to accept or reject God," Carleton asserts.

Christ's words came to be either misunderstood and interpreted as "freedom for what I believe only," or ignored, for when the Christian movement became strong enough to dominate the Roman imperial government, it proved even more intolerant than the pagan empire had been to Christianity.

Religious Liberty: The Long Struggle

The Edict of Milan in 313 A.D. gave Christians the right to follow their religious practices without being "troubled or molested." This was followed by a statement, "Note at the same time all others are to be allowed the free and unrestricted practice of their religion, for it accords with the good order of the realm and the peacefulness of our times that each should have freedom to worship God after his own choice, and we do not intend to detract from the honor due to any religion or its followers." This came during the so-called pagan Roman Empire, Carleton points out.

EVEN THOUGH the last "pagan Roman emperor," Julian, was opposed to Christianity, he followed a liberal policy toward religion during his rule from 361-363 A.D. Julian rejected the use of force against any form of religion, and stated in a decrease: ". . . let the people live in harmony . . . Men should be taught and won over by reason, not by blows, insults or corporal punishment . . . I therefore most earnestly admonish the adherence of the true religion, not to injure or insult those Galileans in any way . . ."

The so-called Christian emperors who followed Julian abandoned this tolerant policy, Carleton says. Heathen or pagan rites were prohibited, even in private, by the year 391 A.D. Forms of Christianity that were considered heretical or schismatic were strictly forbidden by law.

An extreme intolerance of non-Christian and of "non-Orthodox" beliefs was to remain the basis for the laws of Christendom for 1,200 more years.

"It was accepted as axiomatic that faith in a loving saviour could be propagated by the rod of iron," Carleton says.

The extremes to which proponents of the "Christian faith" went in proclaiming and propagating their beliefs was evidenced by the Christianity practiced by military leaders, posing as missionaries, during the Crusades. Carleton emphasizes that when "Islam spread its crescent across the earth, the conquered people were given a choice of tribute or conversion."

"THE CHRISTIANS weren't so tolerant," Carleton continues. When Charlemagne conquered the Saxons, he offered them a choice of baptism or the executioner's sword.

In the centuries to follow, countries growing out of the dissolution of the Holy Roman Empire followed a pattern of repressing religious beliefs considered by those in power to be unorthodox or heretical.

Ingenious methods were devised to persuade "heretics to see the error of their ways and accept the true faith," Carleton says.

The level of intolerance reached an unbelievable extreme in the British colonies of North America with the Salem witch trials in Massachusetts, where 19 persons, mostly women, were condemned and executed for allegedly practicing occultism.

Such bigotry and intolerance stirred consciences of free-thinking men, such as John Locke, English philosopher and political scientist. Locke affirmed religious liberty as a fundamental right of every man and said that any act of persecution in the name of religion was wholly unjustifiable.

REV. ISAAC Backus (1724-1800) in his "Church History of New England from 1602-1804," wrote that the "fathers at Plymouth, through great dangers and difficulties, had prepared the way for many who disliked the corruptions and oppressions in the Church of England."

In the New World, Roger Williams "earnestly laboured to prevent those measures" where persecutors of Baptists in England "were then exerting all their influence to bring these people again under their power in religious matters."

Backus, a pastor in Middleborough, Mass., said Williams worked "to promote the establishment of full liberty of conscience in this country (the colonies)," and ". . . all their power was bent against him."

Williams was banished in 1635 after he was brought to court in Massachusetts for preaching against a 17th Century government loyalty oath. He refused to retract his denunciation of the "oath of a Freeman," and pressure was brought to bear against his church at Salem, Mass., in the guise of a threat to take the church's land.

HE WAS NEXT banished by official decree and given six weeks to leave the area. He didn't go, so Massachusetts officials ordered Williams to Boston in January, 1636. He sent an excuse for not coming, so an "officer was sent to take him," Backus wrote. Williams had left Salem three days before the officer arrived.

"He (Williams) first went to the place since called Rehoboth; but Governor Winslow wrote to him, that he was then within Plymouth Colony, but if he would only go over the river, he would be out of it, and be as free as themselves."

Williams did as the governor suggested and "obtained a grant of lands from the Narraganset Indians, where he began the "first civil government upon earth that gave equal liberty of conscience . . ."

"And from a view of the great things which God had done, he called the place Providence," Backus added.

The difficulties encountered in Massachusetts by Williams and others "may be a warning to all after ages, against confounding church and state together in their government," Backus observed, sounding a note that was later to become a cornerstone of American philosophy and practice.

WILLIAMS NEVER retracted his statements about liberty of conscience and was not restored to favor in Massachusetts until 1936, when a predominantly Roman Catholic Massachusetts legislature lifted the centuries-old ban on the free-thinking Baptist minister, long dead but not forgotten.

Religious persecution in the United States wasn't limited to mere banishment, Dr. Carleton notes. Death came to three Quakers by hanging on Oct. 20, 1659, again in Massachusetts.

"William Robinson, Marmaduke Stevenson, and Mary Dyre, were condemned to die, for returning after they were banished on pain of death; and the two men were hanged at

IN RESEARCHING the history of man's long struggle to attain religious freedom, Golden Gate Theological Seminary professors and scholars Dr. C. Arthur Insko, left, and Dr. William A. Carleton peruse a replica of the Constitution of the United States of America, a vital document in man's progress toward individual liberties. They found the copy of the Constitution in the library of the seminary on Mill Valley's Strawberry Point.

THE BOOK, "An Abridgement of the Church History of New England from 1602 to 1804" by Massachusetts pastor Isaac Backus, published in 1804 by E. Lincoln of Boston, is a prime source of information on early religious dissension and persecution in America. This copy of the rare book is to be found in the archives of Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary.

Boston the 27th," wrote Backus. The woman was sent away, but returned and was executed in June, 1660. Another Quaker, William Leddra, was hanged in March, 1661, for a "like crime."

The Quakers were said to be ". . . fit instruments to propagate the kingdom of Satan; for the securing of ourselves and our neighbours from such pests, we have imprisoned them all till they be dispatched away to the palce from whence they came." This was in a letter from the court at Boston to the commissioners of the United Colonies meeting at Plymouth in the mid-1650s.

DR. CARLETON points out that Backus himself was more than a bystander in the advocacy of religious liberty and separation of church and state.

When the founding fathers, several of whom were from Massachusetts, were in Philadelphia drafting the various guarantees of freedoms for the citizens of the new nation of these United States of America, it was Backus who intruded into the proceedings to ask how freedom could be discussed at such a gathering when religious freedom was being denied in Massachusetts.

Carleton relates: "This caused a great deal of embarrassment for the members of the Massachusetts delegation, and they spent a goodly amount of time trying to appease Backus and quiet him down."

Another early American advocate of religious liberty was Thomas Jefferson, who passed over many accomplishments of importance in his life to ask that he be remembered as the author of the Declaration of Independence, the Father of the University of Virginia, and the author of the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom.

The latter declared ". . . that no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be enforced, restrained, molested, or burthened in his body or opinions or belief; but that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and that the same shall in no wise diminish, enlarge, or affect their civil capacities."

THE GENERAL Assembly of Virginia further declared, ". . . we are free to declare, and do declare, that the rights hereby asserted are of the natural rights of mankind. . . . If any act shall be hereafter passed to repeal the present or to narrow its operation, such act will be infringement of natural right."

After the centuries of intolerance by those professing to be Christians, it would appear that a new age of religious tolerance had dawned. Dr. C. Arthur Insko agrees with Dr. Carleton that religious intolerance is largely on the defensive in today's world, but notes there is still an unhealthy tendency, in the United States for example, to reject a "pluralistic view" of religious liberty.

This "nativist nationalism," says Insko in a newly published multi-authored book, "Extremism Left and Right," is "concerned with establishing the remnants of the Protestant establishment . . .

"THE EFFORTS to preserve Bible-reading in the public schools have become a crusade to 'keep America Christian.'"

Insko says that much of the support for anti-Catholicism, anti-Semiticism, anti-refugee sentiment, racism and the "nativism of ultra-conservative Protestant groups," comes from what Franklin Littell, author of "From State Church to Pluralism," calls "islands of defensive culture-religion which resent being passed by in the flow of national history."

"Even the casual student of history soon discovers that the adoption of a resolution or even the enactment of official edicts is no guarantee of subsequent conduct. Legal enactments may be filled with such ambiguities that they actually withhold what they profess to grant," Carleton agrees.

Such a document exists in the Maryland Edict of Religious Toleration, issued April 21, 1649, he points out.

The document states in one place that no one shall be "molested or discountenanced for, or in respect of, his or her religion or in the free exercise thereof within this Province or the islands thereto belonging nor in any way compelled to the belief or exercise of any other religion against his or her consent."

THE SAME document in another place reads, ". . . that person or persons within this Province who shall henceforth blaspheme God or deny our Saviour Jesus Christ to be the son of God or shall deny the Holy Trinity . . . shall be punished with death and confiscation or forfeiture of all his or her lands and goods to the Lord Proprietary . . ."

Victory is seldom won with a mere passing of a law, even when ambiguities do not occur, Carleton and colleague Insko advise.

Even with the proposing of the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States on Sept. 25, 1789 — "The Congress shall make no law regarding the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof" — it was more than 40 years before the elimination of such laws became a reality in all of the states, Carleton explains.

Religious persecution and definitions of separation of church and state are still "live issues" in the 1970s, he maintains.

"STRIFE AND bloodshed in Ireland and wholesale massacres in Pakistan may not be due entirely to religious differences, but no one can question that bigotry and religious discrimination have played major roles in both cases," Carleton says. And he adds that reports have come out of Communist countires of late that tell of harrassment of Christians, loss of civil rights, terrorism from the authorities, prison, torture, and even death at the hands of nonbelieving officials of the communist governemnts.

These reports, he says, conflict with other reports that hold churches in Russia to be free and open.

Even in the United States the problem is not a simple one, Carleton and Insko say.

Almost every day the news media carry items involving the principle of religious liberty, the former points out. Legislators and religious leaders alike are currently discussing the implications of the present trend toward governmental support of non-public schools. The right of tax-exempt organizations, such as church denominations or bodies, to lobby in the halls of government is another area of immediate concern. The status of military chaplains is yet another controversial issue.

AN INCREASING trend toward bringing religion into secular life has created a myriad of problems and issues that cannot be answered with time-ridden cliches or euphemisms, Carleton declares.

The church is turning more and more to the state for action in solving the social, political and economic problems confronting the country today, Insko agrees. The state, in turn, is turning to the church as a channel through which the government may perform the tasks having to do with education, health, welfare and kindred concerns.

"The church cannot ignore this call for help, no more than it can ignore the implications of what Dr. James L. Sullivan, executive secretary-treasurer of the Baptist Sunday School Board has called "an inevitable taxation of churches" to come in the United States, says Carleton.

Sullivan made his comment during a Lecture-Dialogue Day address at Golden Gate Seminary on Oct. 20, 1971, in which he discussed the future of the church in the United States.

"THE RESPONSIBILITY of religious bodies cannot be evaded any longer by an appeal to the precept of separation of church and state," Carleton contends. "Religious bodies are not free to ignore zoning laws, building codes and sanitary provisions. They must be involved in that which effects the welfare of citizens in general."

In March, 1972, there were 65 cases dealing with alleged violations of the principle of religious liberty pending before the U.S. Supreme Court. "The difficulty of making the decisions seems to be increasing," Carleton observes. "The question of the right of the state to force a citizen to perform an act or follow a line of conduct repugnant to his conscience has always created a problem in wartime.

"This has been compounded a hundred-fold in the present Vietnam conflict, where young men have been classified as criminals because of their refusal to take part in what they sincerely believe to be mass murder.

"There conditions all point to a need for a continued emphasis on religious liberty if it is really worhty of preservation."

LESSONS OF the past have taught that separation is the best way to guarantee independence for both religion and the state in their respective spheres, Insko believes. "The American experiment" of religious liberty has demonstrated that separation "makes possible a stronger and healthier church or religious organization," he declares.

"When disestablishment was in process in the early 19th Century, there were grave apprehensions as to whether the church could exist without state support," he says. But those fears have, thus far, proven to be unfounded. Conversely, the church, left to its own devices, thrived without government intervention.

This self-sustaining trend may now be reversing itself, with the help of organized religion and its apparent willingness to accept government aid and loans for ailing parochial and denominational church schools, Insko feels.

Vatican II, meeting on Dec. 7, 1965, decreed: "This Vatican Council declares that the human person has the right to religious freedom. This freedom means that all men are to be immune from coercion on the part of individuals or social groups or of any human power in such wise that no one is to be forced to act in a manner contrary to his own beliefs, whether privately or publicly, whether alone or in association with others, within due limits."

THE COUNCIL declared also that ". . . the right of the human person to religious freedom is to be recognized in the constitutional law whereby society is governed, and thus it is to become a civil right."

While Insko and Carleton are both strongly in favor of religious liberty for all people, regardless of belief and ideologies, each admits that religious liberty carries with it some dangers. Freedom "within due limits," as stated by Vatican II, is valid for the inner stability of a religious institution, says Insko.

"Christians must recognize, as must other religions, that the systems of teaching do not contain all of the 'truth' of their gospel," he adds. "All are subject to human error. Some of us have been concerned at the number of sects and denominations, but its better that people hear varied interpretations of the truth than for a dominant church to hide the 'gospel' from many people."

Carleton expands on Insko's statement concerning differing interpretations of what is Truth: "To interpret the term religious liberty to mean that a man may be a member of a church while affirming and practicing beliefs contrary to the principles upon which the church is founded is preposterous.

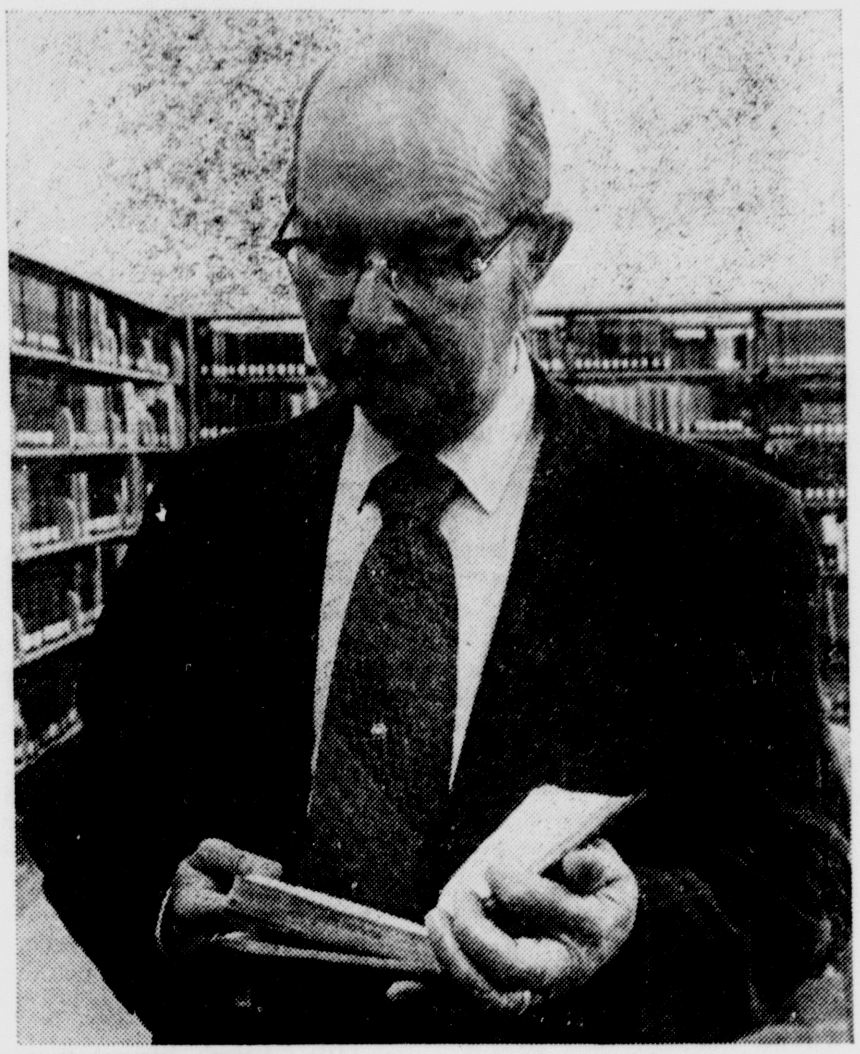
"BUT THE church must not seek to administer disciplines in any other realm."

He illustrates, "The church of the 16th Century was within its rights in excommunicating a convicted heretic and denying the rites of the religion he had forsaken.

"The church was guilty of a monstrous crime when it then turned the condemned man over to the secular powers and required that he be punished for his spiritual error."

"The story of the past and the recognition of the frailties of human nature," suggest a concluding plea to Carleton who this summer departs for Africa and a year of teaching in the young nation of Tazania.

"Those of us to whom freedom of conscience is so precious should always be willing to grant to others that which we demand for ourselves."



THE INFORMATION upon an era in early American history when Roger Williams and other early exponents of religious liberty faced banishment and other persecution, Dr. William A. Carleton consults the pages of Isaac Backus' "An Abridgement of the Church History of New England from 1602 to 1804." Dr. Carleton, dean emeritus and retiring professor of church history at Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, will be going to the young country of Tanzania in Africa for a year of teaching.

"The coach's role is to create an atmosphere where educational values are emphasized — not just trying to win championships," believes San Rafael High School's athletic director, Mike Diaz.

By LEW CODDINGTON

The coach was complaining because his hair was too short.

"I just wanted a trim, but the barber took too much off the sides," Mike Diaz was saying. "I like it full."

Five years ago, such a statement would have gotten Diaz drummed out of the mythical brotherhood of American sports coaches. Today, however, it scarcely matters — at least in the eyes of the man who became San Rafael High School's athletic director last year, and coached basketball for 12 years before resigning in April.

"The kids don't care," he said. "They see you as a person, and they react to you that way."

LET THERE be no misunderstanding. In appearance, Diaz is not Abbie Hoffman — or even Wayne Lechner (one of the long-haired players he coached in basketball last year). But he has developed his own ideas about what things are important in athletics, and hair length is not among them.

"The coach's role is to create an atmosphere where educational values are emphasized — not just trying to win championships," he said.

"Many schools are having financial problems. Many are talking of curtailing if not cutting off the program. I feel the investment is a sound one. The benefits derived are great, not just for the athletes but for the other students as well."

DIAZ CAN easily spend half an hour rattling off the benefits like a staccato ticker-tape machine, but when he comes to one in particular, he stops to give it special emphasis.

"Look what athletics has done for the poor and minorities. It has enabled them to rise in society, educationally and economically.

"I am an example of this."

Born 37 years ago in Westwood, Calif., Diaz grew up in the small town of Fairfield. "I didn't have any plans," he says now. "My idea was to graduate from high school and get a job somewhere."

Somewhere along the line, however, he picked up a basketball, tossed it in the direction of a hoop, and saw that he could put it through more often than his friends and neighbors could.

HE BECAME a player, and a superb one, twice all-Northern California while in high school. He averaged 30 points a game in a time when there were entire high school teams that didn't score as much.

His senior year in 1953, he led Armijo High to a 21 victory, two loss record and a berth in the prestigious Tournament of Champions, where he set records that still stand for most free throws in a game (13) and tournament (25). In an era when scoring records sometimes don't last 19 hours, 19 years is astonishing.

Much of his philosophy today derives from his relationship with his coach at Armijo, Ed Hopkins. "He was my coach, counselor and friend," Diaz says. "He helped me in my personal life, and he guided me toward college."

THE WHOLE story so resembled the American Dream that a book publisher would turn it down for being too corny. Diaz went to the University of California at Berkeley, learned, played well, earned the respect of his coaches, and got a break when head basketball coach Pete Newell informed him of a teaching-coaching opportunity at St. Vincent High in Vallejo.

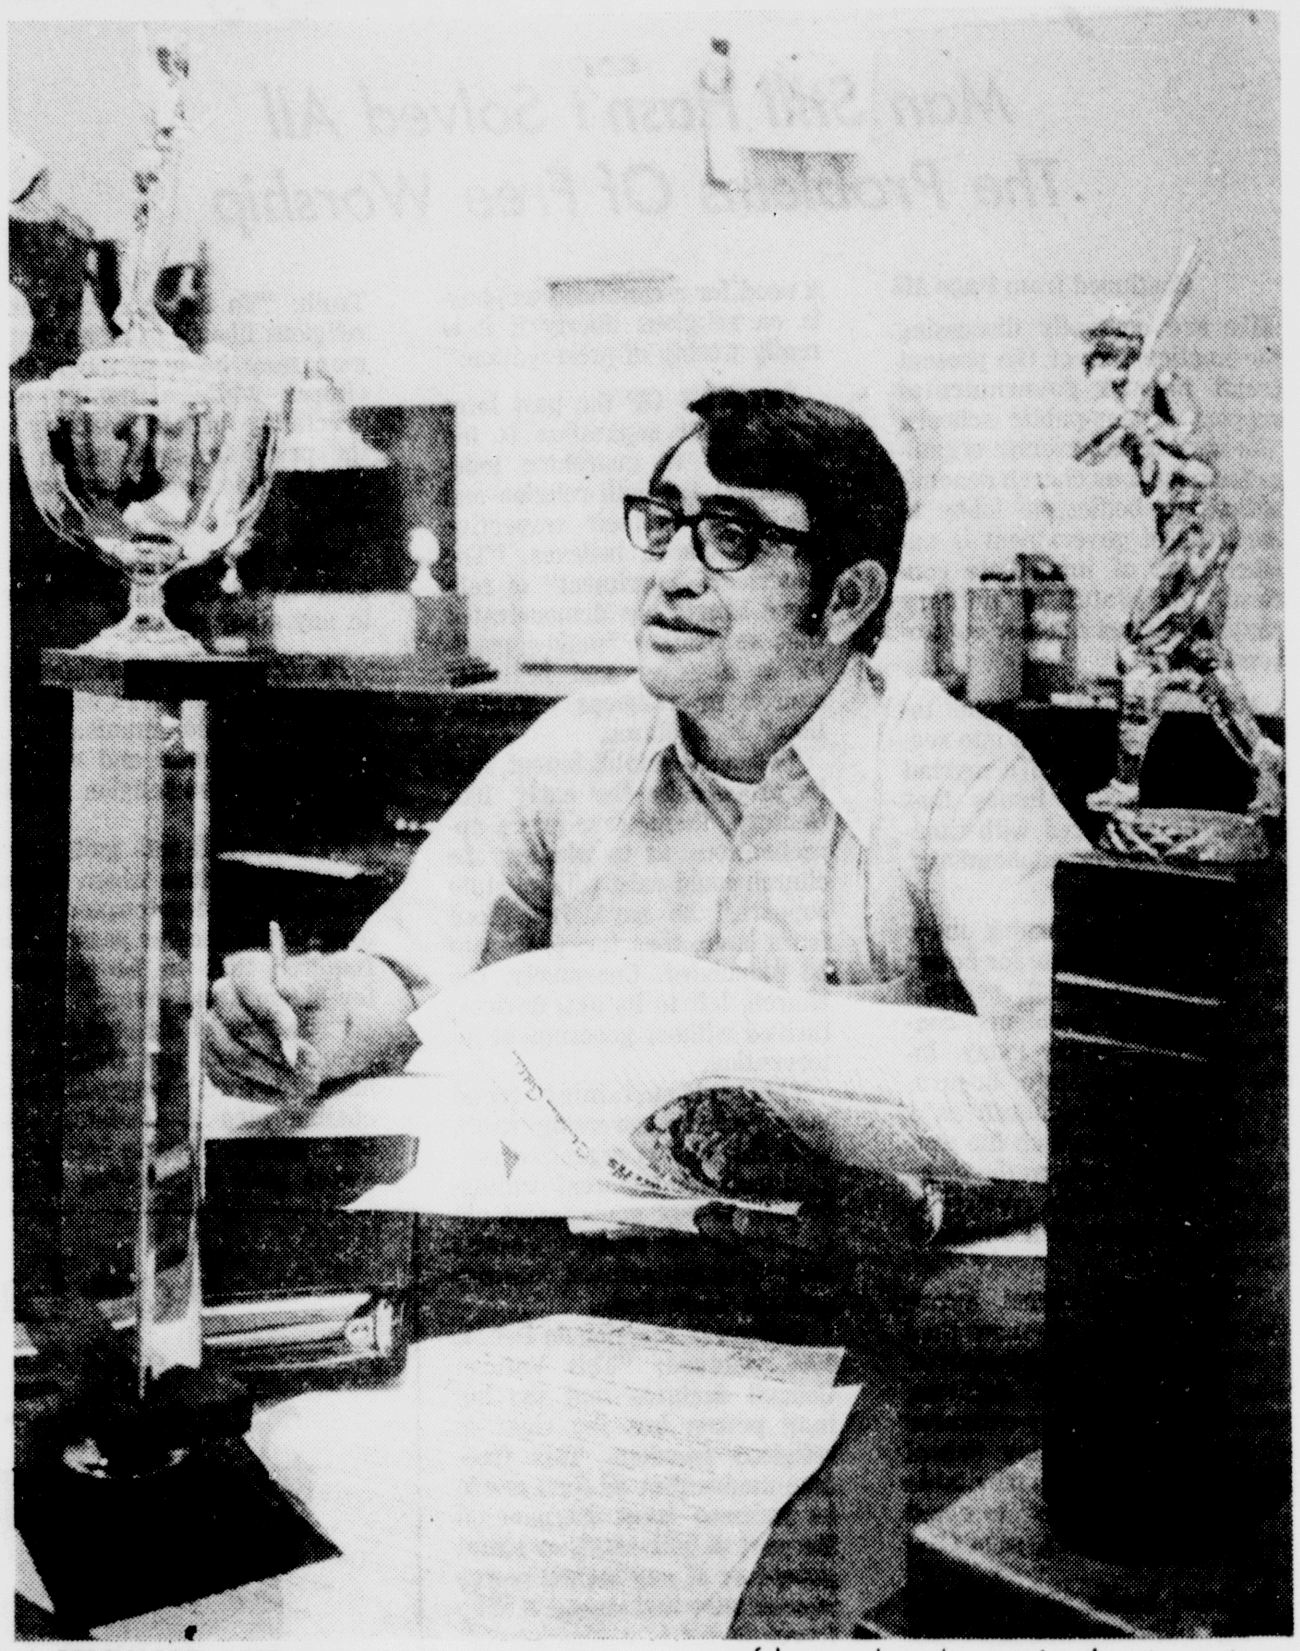
"I discovered I liked teaching, even though the conditions there weren't the best," says Diaz. After a year at St. Vincent he returned to Armijo, coached two years under Hopkins, and got another break — new Cal cage coach Rene Herrerias called to tell him of a coaching opening at San Rafael.

"I still had to sell myself, but I'm glad I got the chance," he says.

HE CAME TO San Rafael in 1960, and won Marin County Athletic League basketball titles in 1962 and 1964 with the Bulldogs. Later he and the rest of the league fell victim to a dynasty imposed by Redwood High, but Diaz' team threw off that yoke with a stunning 63-59 victory Jan. 14, ending Redwood's 43-game MCAL winning streak.

In April, he quit as basketball coach, citing "the emotional ups and downs. I have a tendency to take a loss personally. I know I should be more philosophical, but it's difficult."

His final team went 9-5 in the league, 15-12 over-all. His replacement is former junior varsity coach Bret Tovani, who had worked under Diaz at San Rafael.



A PERSUASIVE DEFENDER of high school athletic programs is Mike Diaz of San Rafael High School who resigned as basketball coach in April after 12 successful years, but who remains close to sports as the school's athletic director.

DIAZ REMAINED as athletic director, a post he assumed last year. He also teaches one period of world history and two periods of world geography daily, a load fixed at two periods under the norm to compensate for the extra time he must devote to athletics.

"There is a lot of extra time involved. I have to meet with salesmen and other people. I have to attend many functions, such as games, special events, banquets, meetings. I have to inventory uniforms."

In addition, he has a parallel job as director of student activities related to athletics, which involves such things as crowd supervision. Athletic directors do not loaf — it would be hard work enough just to avoid all the tasks which are thrown at them.

THE ATHLETIC director's chief duty, according to Diaz, is to oversee the budget. This includes ordering equipment and uniforms and dividing the monies equitably among all sports. "The toughest thing about the job is that you can't please everybody," he says.

The director also must coordinate all the scheduling and transportation, promote the program, pay the game officials, hire and evaluate the coaches, and make sure coaches adhere to the rules.

"I just couldn't give as much of myself — my time and energy — to coaching," he says. "But I didn't want to leave athletics completely. Some people can do both jobs, but I can't. I guess I'm getting older.

"One of the most important things about the job is creating a sound and balanced program — not emphasizing one sport over another. All sports are important. Some — like football — may produce more revenue, but all of them have an important place."

DIAZ SAYS he has made no major changes in the way athletics is run at San Rafael, and plans none for the future. "I do think I have brought about an improvement in the relationship among the coaches," he says.

"Before, there was some interdepartmental friction. Nothing critical — nothing that hurt the over-all program — but there were little things which would creep up, like the use of facilities, or which sport a certain boy would play in.

"Things are fine now. We have very cooperative coaches here, and very good ones in terms of ability.

"I BELIEVE the athletic director should not intervene in how the coaches operate their teams as long as it's apparent that they're doing their job in a professional manner. Sometimes, however, it's necessary to intervene."

His intervention in basketball next winter will be restricted to "a little fatherly advice" to Tovani, Diaz says now. "I enjoy coaching," he says, "and when I see Bret getting the team ready for summer league now, I think I'm going to miss coaching.

"But I'm still close to athletics. That's what matters."

Memories Of Earlier Ross Fete

The theme of the 1972 holiday celebration at the Marin Art and Garden Center in Ross, "Grand Old Fourth," is well calculated to remind the middle and older generations of earlier Fourth of Julys of cannon crackers, parades and band concerts.

But the scene of the festival, to open tomorrow and continue through Tuesday, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily, is certain to bring to mind for many memories of another kind — of fairs and fetes held in the past under the

AS ITS contribution to the three-day fiesta in 1946 that is regarded as the beginning of the tradition of an annual community celebration on the Marin Art and Garden Center grounds in Ross, the Inverness Garden Club re-created this piece of West Marin's sandy shoreline, suitably embellished with driftwood, glass floats and rock. From the 1946 event was to come an annual Marin Art and Garden Fair, Marin's official county fair. Since the fair moved to its new Civic Center site, member groups of the Art and Garden Center have continued the tradition of a community fiesta on the Ross grounds with a Fourth of July holidays festival. The 1972 event opens tomorrow for a three-day run, and with a theme of "Grand Old Fourth." Along with earlier Fourths, many visitors will be remembering the first festivals under the big trees.

A THREE-DAY FIESTA and flower show on the shaded grounds of the Marin Art and Garden Center, then only a year old, is generally regarded as the first Marin County fair, unofficial though it was. It included settings by nurserymen, landscapers and gardening clubs, such as this one by Sunnyside Nurseries, that were to become a traditional part of fairs held at the center through 1970.

LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT Scott Tilden created this outdoor living scene for the 1946 fiesta or fair at the Marin Art and Garden Center. Tilden is now supervisor of parks for the city of San Rafael.

big trees and upon the cool lawns of the center.

The annual holiday fiesta for which member organizations at the center join forces each July is a direct descendant of the Marin Art and Garden Fair, the official county fair held annually on the Ross grounds until the county-sanctioned event was shifted to a new site at the Marin Civic Center in 1971.

And for many visitors to the center these next three days, those recollections will go back to a time before the Art and Garden Center fiesta became the official county fair, and before the Fourth of July period became traditional for its scheduling.

Perhaps as far back as the first such really organized affair — in 1946. That took place over three days in September.

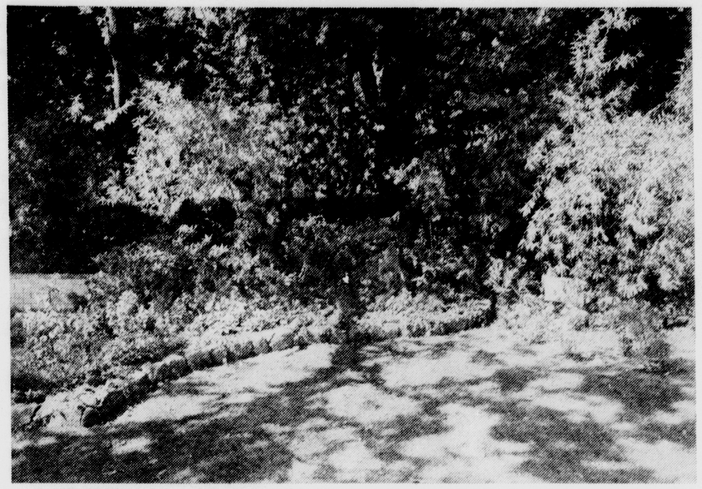
The center grounds, located on what was once part of the vast holdings of Scottish-born pioneer James Ross, the site of the home of Ross' daughter and son-in-law, the George Worns, and finally the Jonathan Kittle estate, had been acquired by civic-minded forces headed by Mrs. Norman B. Livermore the previous year. In 1945 a one-day fund raising event proved so successful that the full-scale festival or fair was staged the following year.

Fanning memories of that 1946 event was the recent discovery in storage at the Art and Garden Center of a cache of photographs taken that year by Oakland photographer Clyde H. Sunderland.

Those pictures, now published for the first time, are the ones you see on these pages.

A ONE-DAY AFFAIR having proved successful in 1945, the opening year for the Marin Art and Garden Center in Ross, the groups supporting the county's new cultural and recreational mecca joined together in 1946 to employ a designer to plan and manage a more ambitious three-day festival. Here the late Caroline B. Livermore, leading figure in the movement for the center, staffu the ticket stand at right, while patrons pass through the gate for the 1946 event. The festival became Marin County's official county fair in 1950. That event was moved to a new site at the Marin Civic Center in 1971, but member groups at the center are continuing the tradition of the fiesta on the Ross grounds with an annual celebration over the Fourth of July period. The 1972 festival, "Grand Old Fourth," opens tomorrow.

IN THE SHADE of the now-much-taller locust tree, one of many fine specimens that grace the Marin Art and Garden Center grounds, visitors to the 1946 fiesta that was to blossom into a Marin tradition enjoyed refreshments prepared by the Ross Valley Players, a member unit and regular participant in the annual event. The Players along with other member groups will be on hand again for the three-day "Grand Old Fourth" celebration opening on the Ross site tomorrow.



A QUIET NOOK designed and constructed by San Rafael Nursery for the 1946 fair at the Marin Art and Garden Center was representative of the landscape exhibits that were to charm fair-goers for the next decade and a half.

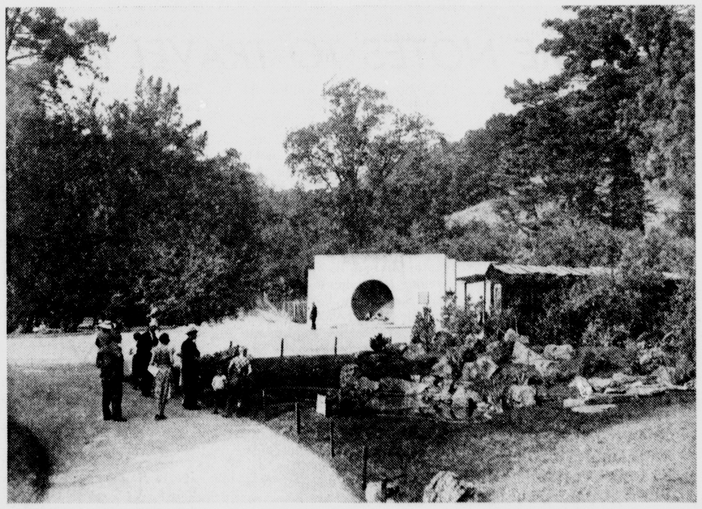
THE MARIN GARDEN Club was represented at the first "fair" to be held on the Ross grounds, and was to continue to be a loyal and outstanding particpant in the years to come.



IN THE CENTER of the Marin Art and Garden Center grounds, Mill Valley Nursery put together this display of rock, water and plantings that visitors to the 1946 festival found a refreshing place to pause in their strolls.

The Castles Built By Gold And Slaves

By WILLIAM MARES

CAPE COAST, Ghana — Beneath the prim, stark, white-washed walls of Dixcove Fort, a band of children play soccer.

Farther down the hill, their mothers spread the day's laundry out to dry on the parched grass. Below that, the men of the village repair their nets for the next day's fishing.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to imagine that this tranquil, almost toy fortress was part of the slave trade for several hundred years. Walking along its parapets, one has only a sense of space, of fresh breezes, and clean beaches.

THE GUNS OF Cape Coast Fortress in Ghana, though long silent, still point menacingly out to sea. It is one of a chain of castles built by Europeans on the West African coast to protect their gold and slave trades. Some 30 of the forts still stand in various stages of repair.

NOT UNTIL one ducks into the lower reaches of the building, into low-ceilinged rooms and cavern-like dungeons, does one find an atmosphere of perpetural decay. Away from the bright sunlight, the muffled cries of the degraded and betrayed slaves comes to thought.

Almost every major European nation took part in the building of Dixcove and similar forts over a period of 300 years. Drawn by tales of fabulous gold mines, the Portuguese were the first to come.

In 1482 they built a permanent fort at Elmina (where it seems that Christopher Columbus stopped on his way to America). And for the next 120 years, they held a virtual monopoly on the gold trade.

BY THE END of the 16th Century, other countries were nibbling at West Africa's wealth. The Danes, the English, the Dutch, the Swedes, and the French all came to the Gulf of Guinea to build forts and castles for the lucrative gold trade.

But during the 17th Century, an ultimately much more profitable trade developed — slaves — and the purpose of the forts altered accordingly.

The Travel Pages

No one will ever know how many thousands of Africans passed through the dungeons on their way to Europe or "the New World." Today there remains almost no record or trade of the jailed or of their jailers.

ABOUT 30 castles still stand in various states of repair, but inside they are mostly empty hulks, as impersonal to the visitor as they are to the villagers who live nearby.

Several of them have been made into museums, others have practical uses: At least two of them (Shama and Axim) contain post offices, two have become rest houses, and Elmina is now a police training barracks.

The majority of slave fortresses, however, have fallen into ruin, victims of neglect and the ever-encroaching winds from the sea.

MEXICAN MEMENTOS: AUTHENTIC, ECONOMICAL

Almost every vacationer tries to return home with authentic mementoes of his travels.

Unfortunately, the average tourist is too often sold a bill of goods — what he thought was handmade, and representative of the craftsmanship of the area, turns out to have been mass produced by machine rather than carefully crafted by an artisan.

Mexico, offers the careful tourist an excellent opportunity to come home with genuine examples of Mexican handiwork. According to the American Automobile Assn., Mexico has established Centros Artesanales and Casas de la Artesania in major cities to provide an outlet for authentic handicraft work.

For the more adventurous tourist who wants to do his shopping at the source, AAA offers this guide to the major Mexican handicrafts and where to find them:

Silver. Mexico is the world's largest silver producer and Taxco is Mexico's "Silver City." Here, master craftsmen working with sterling or silver plate, often in combination with other materials, produce a wide range of articles. Other silver centers are Guadalajara and San Miguel de Allende.

Look for the spread-eagle hallmark on the silver. That's the government's guarantee that the silver is sterling.

Tin. The most creative tinwork can be found in San Miguel de Allende, but most public markets in Mexico offer trays, coffee table tops, masks, candleholders and other objects of tin.

Copper. Mexico's ancient Indian craftsmen worked exclusively in copper. The best known source of copperware today is Santa Clara del Cobre, a small village near Patzcuaro where the lanterns, pitchers, jewelry and other fine copper crafts are hand-hammered and highly polished.

Basketry. The weaving of baskets, dolls and other decorative items from reeds and plant fibers is a universal art in Mexico. Among the best are those from Oaxaca, Toluca and Merida, where woven Yucatecan sisal is also used for hats, table mats and shoes.

Serapes. These shawl-like garments for men and companion rebozos for women are made from hand-loomed wool. The best ones come from Oaxaca, Patzcuaro, San Miguel de Allende, Tlaxcala and Toluca.

Embroidery. Decorative work on handmade wearing apparel is a specialty of Aguascalientes, Guadalajara, Morelia, Patzcuaro and Puebla. Huipiles, a white cotton shift with delicately embroidered neckline and hem are a specialty of Merida.

Most of these goods also can be purchased in specialty shops in Mexico City where bargaining is considered part of the purchasing process.

An overnight flight from New York will bring you to Madred. At Barajas Airport, you can change to Iberia, the national airline of Spain, for a flight of less than hour to Malaga on the Costa del Sol, the southern extension of the Spanish Riviera.

If you want to fly from Boston, you can take Pan American or Air France overnight to Paris, and from Orly fly to Madrid and Malaga. Still another routing would be Pan American or TAP (the Portuguese airline) to Lisbon where you could change for Malaga.

If you are already in Europe, you can take KLM (Royal Dutch Airlines) from Amsterdam to Malaga. KLM flies DC-9s on this route.

If you are in Nice on the French Riviera, you can take an Air France Caravelle to Madrid and continue south from there.

From Madrid, if Iberia does not have enough seats, you may very well find yourself on a Fokker Friendship, a two-motor jet prop holding about 50 people, of Spantax, a charter outfit which leases itself to other carriers. The flight in a Fokker will take about an hour and a half and will set you down at an airport which handles large jets, including stretched DC-8s which fly in from Buenos Aires, Argentina.

MALAGA IS A pleasant place to be at any time of the year. It is a moderate sized port right on the Mediterranean from which it is swept by sea breezes.

In the winter it has a climate like Florida. In the summer, the heat is tempered by the ocean and the breezes off of it.

The city has a number of good hotels including the Malaga Palace, right on the Paseo de Espana, a broad tree lined boulevard paralling the waterfront. The view from the 12th floor of this hostelry sweeps across the harbor and out to sea and to the left continues along the Paseo to the edge of the Gibralfaro, a high ridge overlooking the city.

On the Gibralfaro is one of the well known Spanish posadas, a government run inn with comfortable rooms and good food. The word Gibralfaro itself is an old Moorish one with means fortress and lighthouse. The old lighthouse has long since been replaced, but the old fortress has stout walls along which you can walk and a small Moorish palace with fountains and flowering patios, a sort of small foretaste fo the Alhambra in Granada.

The Gibralfaro is but a short taxi ride from the city. From this hill, you can view the city, the coast both to the southwest and northeast, and the hills framing the area inland, not to mention the Bull Ring directly below.

AT ANY SEASON of the year, you can take a bus north through the mountains to Granada, there to view the palace made famous by our own Washington Irving. If you go to Granada in the winter, be sure to take a topcoat and sweater because it can snow on the Sierra Nevada Mountains and become cold. The plashing of the water in the patios, the beautiful flowers, the cypress trees waving in the wind, and the tracery of the stone work all combine to take you back to the days of the Caliphs before their peace was broken forever by Ferdinand and Isabella.

Any time of year, you will dine on good Spanish cuisine and good Spanish wine in the restaurants of Granada. Spanish cooking has been overshadowed by the French but has come into its own in recent years.

Farther up the Alhambra Hill are the Gardens of the Generalife with cypress trimmed to form hedges, magnificent roses, more plashing water and an aura of peace and tranquility. Many people consider the Generalife as one of the really great gardens of the world.

WHEN YOU HAVE had your fill of Malaga and Granada, jet back to Madrid and hop from there to the Balearic Islands, preferably Mallorca. If you have an extended wait between planes, go up to the big Airport Restaurant and have yourself some paella, a casserole with rice cooked in saffron, pork, pimientos, peas, mussels, crawfish, and shrimps flavored with a bit of garlic, a meal in itself. Or have some cod cooked in Basque style with a tangy sauce.

Accompany either of these dishes with some Valdepenas white wine.

Mallorca is the biggest of the four Balearic Islands. Menorca and Ibiza also welcome tourists, but Mallorca has ben doing this for 20 years or more, so Palma has many good hotels.

A friend and I stayed about five miles west of Palma in the Del Mar, which had a good view of the water, a comfortable bar, excellent meals, and one of the most friendly and helpful men I have seen at any front desk anywhere.

If you want to set your own pace, hire a taxi for the day and drive around the island. Out on a peninsula to the west is an estate many hotels would like to grab up because of its wonderful location with a good view and not too far from a good beach. This property, however, is not for sale. It was bought about 40 years ago by that star of the old silent screen, Rudolf Valentino. His widow still owns the property and comes back there to entertain guests from time to time.

FARTHER ON IS a whole development only a few years old, run by Frenchmen for Frenchmen, and including a hotel, condominiums and cottages. Nearby is the spot where the Spaniards first landed on the island in the 12th Century.

On the north coast, which is hilly, high and rocky, is the town of Soller, a Navy base where photographers are not welcome. More to the east on a cliff overlooking the sea is a fine restaurant named Os Grau, which serves excellent seafood and is a favorite haunt of tourists of many nationalities.

For those who prefer an older method of transportation to this north coast, there is an ancient trolley car about 60 years old which follows a winding hilly route out of Palma along the edges of the ridges. The highway itself goes through a long rock tunnel whose entrance sign is printed in four languages English included. On the highest point of land in this area, the Spanish Air Force and the U.S. Air Force have a tracking station.

THE MOST SCENIC part of this whole area is Cape Formentor, a rocky headland enclosing a deep bay of blue water. As a matter of fact, the drive along here is comparable to Amalfi-Sorrento drive in Southern Italy and to the Grande Corniche on the French Riviera.

In the Formentor area is the hotel of the same name where you can lunch on a hearty fish soup. After lunch you can stroll down to the water and look across the still waters of a protected bay.

Some miles south of here along the east coast are the Caves of Drach, which have magnificent stalachtites and stalagmites and a magnificent underground lake fed by the Mediterranean. An artificial amphitheater has been built here so that as many as 1,500 people at a time can watch row boats lighted by torches bring in musicians for a concert of light classical music.

The town of Drach has some excellent restaurants.

At Manacor there are large factories which manufacture artificial pearls. Their showrooms are extensive but of great interest to the ladies. When the factories themselves are running, guided tours are available. Groups from American companies like Republic Aviation make this one of their featured stops.

The artificial or synthetic pearls are very lovely in appearance and fairly moderately priced.

IF YOU TIRE of Mallorca, you can fly in a Fokker Friendship to Menorca, a smaller island to the east. Its principal town is located on a landlocked harbor five miles long. This town, named Mahon, saw the origin of that type of salad dressing we know as mayonnaise.

A drive across the island will take you only a couple of hours.

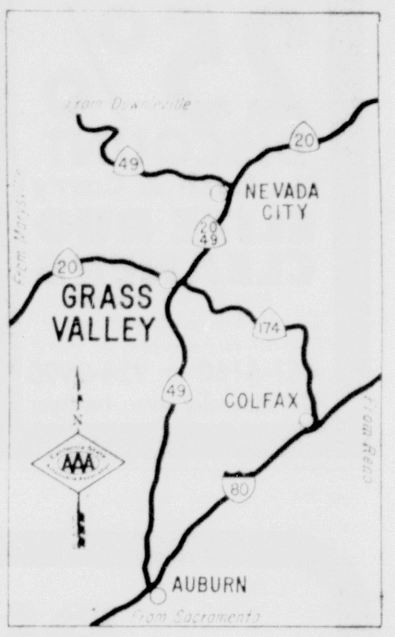
THE PELTON WHEEL at the foot of Grass Valley's Mill Street is one of the relics of yesteryear to be seen in that fascinating Mother Lode town.

Grass Valley — The Heart Of The Gold Country

As vacationers head over Interstate 80 towards Lake Tahoe and the Sierra Nevada, they pass through the foothill country. And when they reach that point where the valley oak and sycamores begin to give way to pine and fir, they are in the heart of California's fabulous gold country.

One of the more active towns in this region is Grass Valley.

Despite its growth in recent years it retains much of the wistful feeling of that era a century ago when mules and men struggled to find gold far below the rich red earth.



A GOOD WAY to begin a tour of this historic mining town is with a visit to the old Pelton Wheel at the foot of Mill Street. This is a large metal wheel, 30 feet in diameter, that was turned by water from high pressure hoses and generated power for the North Star Mine.

Nearby are the homes of Lotta Crabtree and Lola Montez, both in the same block on Mill Street near the center of town.

Lola Montez came from Bavaria in 1853. She was a singer and dancer who had been a favorite of the king. She spent two years in Grass Valley during which time she encouraged a young neighbor, Lotta Crabtree, in the arts of singing and dnacing. Lotta went on to become famous, rich and beloved throughout America.

The Montez home is open to the public for tours during the summer.

A SHORT distance away from the town's center is the Empire Mine, located in a most unusual setting amidst a park-like pine forest. It was the largest mine in Grass Valley and one of the greatest hard-rock mines in California. Many of the buildings used during its long period of operation are still standing. The Empire had 200 miles of underground workings and one record-breaking vein was followed for 9,000 feet before it gave out.

There are other mines, too, where you can visit and poke around among the old mining equipment without danger — the Idaho-Maryland, the North Star, the Pennsylvania.

And much of the fun of Grass Valley is walking down its quaint covered sidewalks along the narrow streets, enjoying the leisurely pace of this old Queen of Northern Mines region.

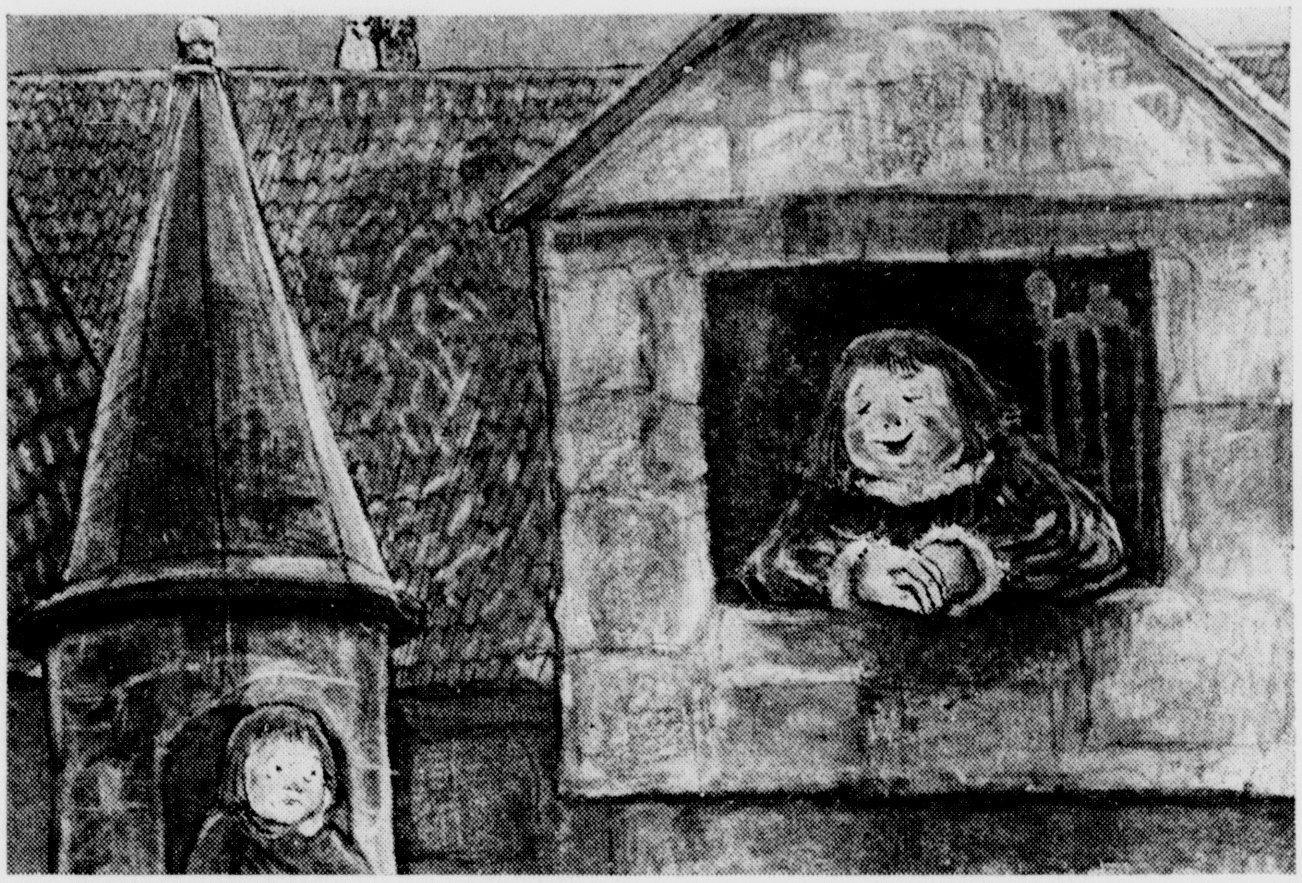
SOME NEW BOOKS FOR THE JUNIORS



THERE'S A Grimm Brothers flavor, but a contemporary flair, to "The Castles of the Two Brothers" (Holt, Rinehart, $4.95) for pre-schoolers and the earliest grades. The unusual narrative technique works out well, and illustrator Steven Kellogg has excelled, using colored pencil, ink and watercolors to flood the pages with sunny colors that are likely to bedazzle and enchant small page-turners. His represents one of the more distinctive and outstanding performances in illustrating a juvenile book of the current year.

As every parent —and neighbor — knows, children have an affinity for noise.

And writer-illustrator Peter Spier has a feeling for fun, and especially for what children regard as fun.

"Crash! Bang! Boom!" (Doubleday, $4.95) is Spier's highly successful effort to capitalize upon this attraction that loud sound has for the young ones, and upon its association with fun and merriment.

Its very colorful and busy pages are filled with sounds and sound-makers — the clip-clip-clop of the hooves of the horse and the squeek-squeek of the wagon he is pulling; the crackle-crack of the lighted fireplace; the grunch-grunch-grunch of a child's boots sinking into the new snow; the rrrummmble of the thunder accompanying the bolt of lightning; the planes and their noises, the sounds of athletes in competition, the music from the instruments of a symphony orchestra. It seems the pictures and the sounds to catch the attention of small page-turners are endless.

Small wonder this Spier classic is a Junior Literary Guild selection. Let us hope, though, that it satisfies, rather than stimulates, the craving for noise that seems to lurk in every boy and girl.

SOME OTHER books for the juniors:

"My Workbook Diary 1973" (American Heritage, $2.95) by Cyndy Szekeres lives up to the billing of its title. It is both a diary and a work book. The work book portion includes such intriguing projects as making cookies, making greeting cards, raising plants and making masks. There are cute full-page color pictures of animals for framing. And there are puzzles and games and coloring opportunities. Plus instructions on how to use the diary. All this in a spiral-bound format. This one comes off far better than most such novelties.

"Alligator" (Harper, $2.50) by Evelyn Shaw with some nice artwork by Frances Zeweifel is a Science I Can Read series book. It follows the challenges to survival faced by the alligator in its swamp home, keeping the language simple, yet telling the story the way it is. It is one of the more effective messages to the young, ages 5 through 8, on behalf of conservation. And a quite informative and painless lesson in zoology. Evelyn Shaw, a San Fracciscan, is a curator of animal behavior for the American Museum of Natural History.

"This book will show you how to draw enough things to make a world of your own," Ed Emberley promises at the outset of "Make a World" (Little, Brown, $3.95). There follows pages and pages of objects that can be drawn from simple forms and letters — ducks, refrigerators, people, clothing, bicycles, boats, trees, barber poles. In fact, more than 400 things in all. Just about enough things to truly populate a world — at least a child's world. And you can bet he is going to be occupied for hours — happy hours — following Emberley's lead in drawing objects and in creating scenes. Another exceptionally well-done novelty book.

"LOOK WHAT Tracy Found" (Knopf, $4.39) is Charlotte Steiner's depiction of the magic of a child's imagination. In the hands of little Tracy, a simple stick becomes many other things — a pony, an oar, a fishing pole, etc. It is the kind of a romp that every creative child enjoys, and which will be equally delightful when shared with the appealing rosy-cheeked Tracy as presented by Miss Steiner, veteran and gifted illustrator.

"Waltzing Matilda" (Holt, Rinehart, $5.95) is a pictorial presentation of the timeless Australian song with Desmond Digby, painter and theater set designer, having done the highly artistic full-page pictures that act out the A. B. Paterson poem. The illustrations are on the level of fine art, thus justifying the rather high price of the book. Small children, however, may be perplexed by the many unfamiliar Down Under terms which Paterson used in his lilting verse. The parent is going to have to do some explaining — and there is a glossary to help him with that task.

Marinite Clement Hurd has done the pictures for Margaret Wise Brown's "The Runaway Bunny" (Harper, $3.95) and the two have produced a charmer for the 3 to 7-year-old crowd. The story originally published in 1942 tells of one baby rabbit and its mother who engage in a verbal game of hide-and-seek, the offspring always reassured that no matter where he goes or what he does, mother will always follow and find him. Hurd's delightful artwork, both in color and in black and white, gives this new edition of an old favorite a refreshing enchantment that will have the small ones poring over it time and-time again.

"The Boy Who Spoke Chinese" (Doubleday, $4.95) by Jessica Krasilovsky is not about China or Chinese at all.

Instead it is about Nicholas, a small boy who has difficulty making his speech understood, and older sister Amanda, embarrassed, who explains to friends that her little brother's difficulty is the result of having been reared in China. Lonely Nicholas finally finds a person to whom he can talk to his heart's content without being rejected — a new baby brother who arrives on the scene. There is something very different about this little book, and the clue may lie in the age of the author-illustrator who was but 15 when she did the book. It has the cool yet involved feeling of the younger generation — and the abrupt, fast-moving pace as well. It succeeds. But $4.95 is a very big price for a very small book.

"Make no mistake about it. A people's platofrm is being formed. It is developing out of the people's needs and frustrations, their hopes and aspirations. Indeed, the people are demanding it so vigorously and with such growing unanimity that it can no longer be stifled or deterred." — Sen. Mike Gravel in "Citizen Power."

A People's Platform

CITIZEN POWER by Sen. Mike Gravel; Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 283 pages, $6.95.

By DON KEOWN

Liberals were distressed in 1968 when Mike Gravel decided to oppose fellow Democrat U. S. Senator Ernest Gruening's bid for reelection, and dismayed when he defeated the incumbent.

Conservatives and certain special interests rejoiced.

Gruening, aging but able, had been one of the Senate's most effective opponents of our interference in Vietnam, a champion of the conservation cause and a consistent defender of the little man against monopoly and wealth.

His successor, however, was to surprise both those who delighted in his victory and those who were disturbed by it.

Mike Gravel has proven himself as idealistic as his predecessor, and ever so much more feisty. He has opposed our costly adventures in Southeast Asia bitterly, urged a considerable reduction in our defense expenditures, spoken and voted for social justice, made a special cause of opposing governmental secrecy, and, although somewhat less effectively than Ernest Gruening, aligned himself generally on the side of the angels in the conservation battles.

Liberals still regret the loss of Gruening's wisdom and courage from the halls of Congress. But they recognize their special good fortune in the qualities and philosophy of his maverick successor.

And the taste of victory acquired in the toppling of the venerable Gruening has long since turned sour in the mouths of the spokesmen for the special interests.

The depth of Gravel's commitment can no longer be in doubt with the publication of his book, "Citizen Power," offered as "A People's Platform" drafted in the "Populist tradition."

"Populist" is a popular phrase with liberal and moderate political candidates these days. But its application to the Gravel book is apt and accurate. It is a George McGovern-type program, without the leavening effect which the South Dakotan's presidential aspirations have necessarily and understandably had upon his views.

Some Mike Gravel proposals, most of which agree with and some of which go well beyond the McGovern positions:

The elimination of all existing federal taxes and their replacement with a single graduated income tax without deductions, exemptions or exclusions of any kind, and bearing more heavily upon higher incomes and less severely upon lower incomes.

A basic citizen's wage, a form of guaranteed income, of $5,000 a year for a family of four and $1,500 a year for a single individual, with some 120 million Americans eligible.

The public financing of election campaigns, and the elimination of the pre-election registration requirement for voting.

The provision of a national initiative and referendum system to enable citizens to make law when thier legislators fail to act or act contrary to their wishes.

A new foreign policy of internationalism that forswears intervention in favor of trade, exchange, cooperation, assistance and tolerance of revolutionary politics.

The reduction of our defense budget, in the context of this new internationalism, to 40 billion dollars a year or less.

A new will on the part of Congress to exercise its powers over the purse and manpower, so as to restrict our Presidents in their military and foreign policy adventures.

The replacement of the draft with voluntary military service.

Amnesty for those who have fled or resisted service because of their opposition to our policies in Southeast Asia.

The bringing of all the nations of the earth into the United Nations fold.

A voice for the employees and for the public along with capital in the management of business.

The placing of "the entire health care complex" under public control, and its operation of a non-profit basis "like our educational institutions."

Sabbaticals for government and industry employees as well as educational professionals.

An escalation of our national commitment to education to perhaps 12 per cent of our gross national product, and the elimination of all inequities in the distribution and expenditure of those funds.

Greater attention to and urgency for the development of less dangerous alternative sources of power than the nuclear energy that now occupies almost totally the interest of government and private sector alike. Fusion energy and solar energy are suggested possibilities.

A "Prisoner's Bill of Rights" for the incarcerated patterned after the sweeping prison reform program initiated in Minnesota by Corrections Commissioner David Fogel.

An immediate revision of the government's classification system, and the establishment of an independent review board to establish more liberal, less restrictive procedures.

The elimination by Congress of secrecy in its own conduct — closed hearings, censored transcripts, unrecorded votes, etc.

The man who burst upon the American political scene and public consciousness when he convened a meeting of a subcommittee he headed for the specific purpose of reading aloud portions of the Pentagon Papers and thus making them part of the public record, discusses at length his reasons for so doing.

"I am convinced the lessons to be learned from the Pentagon Papers outweighed by far any possible risk," he writes. "I hoped by that action I would help to shorten by even one day the senseless killing and destruction in which we persist in Southeast Asia. And I hoped that it would penetrate the shroud of secrecy enveloping and protecting our highest echelons of government. Given the same set of circumstances, I would do it again and again. Secrecy is democracy's worst enemy."

The blunt-speaking Gravel believes that liberals, with their over-reliance upon big government and its bureaucracy, and conservatives, with their fear of change and their obsession with profits and the military, have contributed alike to our current difficulties.

He calls for "a sweeping citizens challenge to the overpowering, existing establishments to change our failing political institutions and repressive economic relationships."

Even more so than George McGovern, Mike Gravel is open to charges of radicalism and extremism. But he insists that "every idea I outline, however radical it at first seems in the context of today's politics, is basic to our spirit and consistent with our history."

Perhaps Mike Gravel might also have noted that our problems — in Asia, with the economy, in our social relationships — are extreme and radical. Perhaps only extreme and radical solutions will suffice.

"Citizen Power" is a very different Fourth of July "oration" from the pap and pomp to which we have become accustomed.

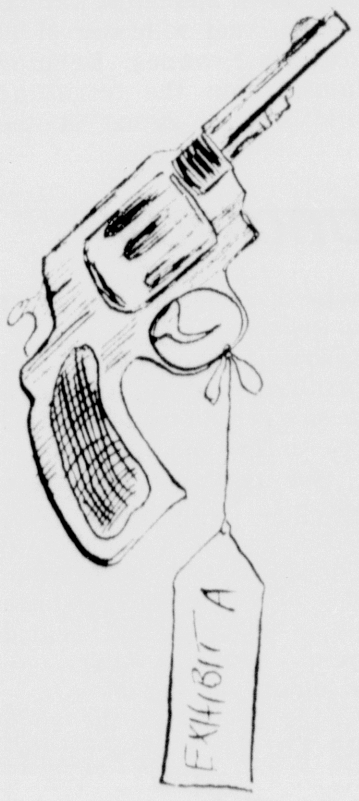
A SPLINTER OF GLASS by John Creasey; Scribner's, 180 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

It has become a fashion of late among critics of crime fiction to disparage the work of John Creasey. Perhaps they are soured by his prolific output or his immense popularity. Or perhaps they are put off by the simplicity of his style and language, although that is exactly the way a who-done-it should be written.

Creasey's newest Supt. Roger West novel, "A Splinter of Glass," finds him in good form. West is confronted with one of England's greatest and most baffling crimes, a gang theft of gold bullion from the London docks. When his first break in the case comes, it explodes with violence. But, with a suspicious superior looking over his shoulder, West presses on, braving personal danger, to an eventual solution of the case in an action-charged climax.

"A Splinter of Glass" does have its soft spot — a most unlikely press interview where reporters talk and act like anything but reporters. And West's new protege is a bit too naive and "goodie-goodie."



But on the whole, it's first-rate Creasey. Which guarantees a pleasant evening of reading.

KENTFIELD author Richard Neely, whose "The Walter Syndrome" was such a success, has a new thriller out in paperback, "The Smith Conspiracy," a Signet Book from the New American Lirary.

The novel is written around a rightwing plot to plunge the United States into disorder and install an ultrapatriotic government. It is 75 cents worth of excitement and intrigue. And Neely's new hardcover book, "The Japanese Mistress," is due soon from Saturday Review Press.

APOLLO EDITIONS has issued a $2.95 softcover version of Edward P. von der Porten's classic "The German Navy in World War II" with a brief foreword by Grand Adm. Karl Donitz.

"DEATH ROW Chaplain," the anti-capital punishment book by Rev. Byron Eshelman and Frank Riley has been given a new publication by New American Library as a 95-cent Signet paperback.

The book originally appeared in 1962, and at that time, and since then has stirred controversy.

Eshelman is currently conducting an eight-session course in "Understanding Life-Experience" at Oakland's Lakeshore Avenue Baptist Church under Yokefellow Prison Ministry auspices, and a six-week seminar on "Prisoner Programs in San Francisco" at Lone Mountain College, San Francisco, as part of that school's summer curriculum.

GEORGE S. KAUFMAN: AN INTIMATE PORTRAIT by Howard Teichmann; Antheneum, 371 pages, $10. Reviewed by Jim Williams.

Long live Howard Teichmann. Co-author of the hit play, "The Solid Gold Cadillac," he has paid a fitting tribute to his late collaborator George S. Kaufman.

His intimate portrait of one of the theater's giants is a fascinating piece of reporting.

Had Kaufman been alive to read the lovingly assembled salute, he might have fired off one of the countless telegrams to Teichmann, picking out a minor mistake, but ending it something like this . . . "I am proud to be part of it . . ." He telegraphed Moss Hart upon reading his collaborator's "Act One," galley proofs a similar congratualtory message.

Not only was Kaufman a playwright, he was a wit, stage director, newspaperman (New York Times), ladies' man, poker and bridge player of the first class, and performer off and on-stage.

Teichmann touches upon each of these facets of the two-time Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright.

When Kaufman was at his height co-authoring with such giants as Marc Connely, Edna Ferber, Moss Hart and Herman Mankiewicz, Broadway was in its glory era with a host of other greats. But Kaufman's was a track record, as Variety put it — 27 hits out of 45 plays.

More than pure Kaufman, Teichmann's work encompasses the whole spectrum of the literary and show business personalities from the 1920s to the 1950s.

Teichmann reintroduces the reader to the famed Algonquin Round Table. Around the luncheon table sat a who's who of the fourth estate, theater and literary worlds — Heywood Broun, Robert Benchley, Harold Ross, Alexander Woollcott, Robert E. Sherwood, Dorothy Parker, Ben Hecht, Charles MacArthur, Alfred Lunt, Lynn Fontanne, Peggy Wood, Harpo Marx, Noel Coward, Tallulah Bankhead and Kaufman, one of the founders of the mighty word fortress.

Teichmann gives us a sampling of the wit — most of it 50 years old, and as he notes "unlike cognac, (it) does not always improve with age."

Kaufman's married life with his first wife, Beatrice, shows his Puritan side. Following the stillborn birth of their only child (later they adopted a daughter) Kaufman never returned to the marriage chamber. Theirs was a modern marriage. Kaufman's playing around was of the most honorable order — even a charge account with the famed Polly Adler. However, all hell broke loose with the public accounts of Kaufman's romance with screen star Mary Astor. For week's Kaufman's affair with Miss Astor was headlined in the nation's tabloids along with the Japanese invasion of Manchuria and the Great Depression.

Teichmann, who entered Kaufman's life in the playwrights waning years, deserves a warm "thank you" for his effort. The pages are filled with the candor and wit of Kaufman.

The Decline And The Fall Of An Emperor And His Queen

THE CROWN OF MEXICO by Joan Haslip; Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 507 pages, $10. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

Ferdinand Maximilian of Austria was in that unhappy situation for a member of royalty: the second son, with the throne therefore beyond his reach. But he dreamed of a crown, and his dreams were given added impetus after he married Princess Charlotte of Belgium, a woman intensely conscious of her own royal lineage and immensely eager for the robes of a queen.

So, when France's Emperor Napoleon III conceived the idea of establishing a satellite of France in Mexico while the United States was embroiled in its Civil War, he offered the crown of Mexico to the young, idealistic and persuadable Archduke Maximilian.

Dreams of empire submerged the better judgment of the archduke, and with an army drawn from France, Austria and a couple of their allies, he set sail for Mexico to give the "civilized rule" of monarchy to a nation torn by its own civil strife.

Mexico's internal divisions enabled the invading force to reach and capture the capital. The Austrian prince was deluded into believing that the few conservatives who preferred a foreign ruler to the revolutionary leader Benito Juarez represented a great groundswell in his favor.

The tale of his hapless adventure, which carried Maximilian to his death before a firing squad and his queen to insanity, is told in vivid detail by Joan Haslip in "The Crown of Mexico."

Maximilian believed in his mission. He sought to rule fairly, to bring what he saw as the benefits of advanced European civilization to all in Mexico. He was never able to understand why the Mexican people preferred corrupt rule by their own nationals to what he considered the more honorable rule of a foreigner.

THE EMPEROR Maximilian and his empress, Carlota or Charlotte, are the tragic central figures in Joan Haslip's "The Crown of Mexico," a Book-of-the-Month Club selection.

Napoleon III was more realistic. When he saw that the United States was defeating the Confederacy, and knew it would never stand for a foreign crown in Mexico, he notified his French troops to pull out. That sealed Maximilian's doom — and his queen's.

Running through this tragic account is a thread that ties it to a situation of today. Although author Haslip never mentions it, the irrationality of the Mexican adventure and the blind tenacity with which Maximilian clung to his delusion is strangely and dreadfully parallel in smaller scale to what has been happening and continues to happen in Vietnam.

The Tragic Story Of Frances Farmer

WILL THERE REALLY BE A MORNING? by Frances Farmer; Putnam's, 318 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Patricia Perry.

Certainly one of the most beautiful women in the world, a fine actress, and gifted with all the drive and willpower of 10 women, Frances Farmer plunged into the terrifying world of the insane at the height of her career.

Why? Schizophrenia would be too pat an answer. In this moving and dreadfully candid autobiography, she documents her years in the Washington State Asylum. And along the way she reveals a classic Freudian reason for her problems.

For from the moment she was born she was in conflict with her mother —who comes across as being nuttier than most. A publicity-hungry eccentric, Mrs. Farmer browbeat her talented daughter, and was, indeed, instrumental in getting her committed to the asylum.

This is not a book to read if you are in a depressed state — the scenes in the violent ward are too brutal, too shocking, too terrifying for comfort.

Yet in its way Miss Farmer's autobiography is a catalogue of triumph over overwhelming odds. On her release after eight years confinement Frances Farmer worked as a typist in Eureka, was rediscovered, and made a new career on television and the legitimate stage in the Midwest.

Even then her new career was plagued by drinking problems . . . she emphatically denies being an alcoholic however. . . and she was fighting her way back from this when she died of cancer shortly after she finished her memoirs.

Adventures Of A Young Runaway

THE TRUE MEMOIRS OF CHARLEY BLANKENSHIP by Benjamin Capps; Lippincott, 252 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Elizabeth Finch.

"The True Memoirs of Charley Blankenship" was the title of an account written in 1901 by Charles E. Blankenship, recording the original writer's experiences during the 10 years subsequent to his running away from home in 1880. Benjamin Capps studied the manuscript on the brittle paper on which it was written, a difficult task for the ink was faded. With great care and patience Capps then rewrote this folklore as much like the original as possible and in the vernacular of the times.

Charley was the second son of three Blankenship boys reared on a farm in Missouri. The father was strict and did not spare the rod. Pa, however, did have an affection for his sons, as did Ma, who was not so firm.

After Charley had finished his spring schooling in 1880 he had a run-in with his Pa. He decided then to run away. Charley would not work on the farm until he was 21 as his father demanded. He chose to be independent and he wanted to locate his oldest brother who had gone west four years earlier.

Just 10 years later Charley found himself returning home. He had been away a long time. But he had learned that the difference between a long time and a short time is what you do with time and what it does to you. It is not the number of weeks and months and years that counts.

Charley's adventures are sufficiently varied to provide a season's scripts for a televised western. The men and women he met represent the whole gamut of "good guys" and "bad guys." The changes in living styles and the development of the country where Charley matured and "found himself", nearly a century ago, are almost unbelievable.

Capps concludes the book with Charley's observation: "Human critters have a strange mingling in them, of sunshine and shadow, of goodness and meanness, of sense and nonsense. They are a mystery, but they are all we've got. Do not harden your heart, nor get too set in your mind about them."

Taking A Vacation? Leave Garden With Sense Of Security

Ever meet up with the gardener so "conscientious" — or "paranoic" — that he refuses to take an away-from-home vacation for fear his garden will go to pot in his absence?

There are some like that.

But a more sensible brand of conscientious gardener is the one who plans ahead, then departs on that vacation with the sense of security that comes from the knowledge that he has left his garden in capable, well-instructed hands.

RARE OF COURSE is the young neighbor who will lavish upon your plants, shrubs and lawn the same painstaking care that you accord them. There is a difference between "owning" and simply being in charge of something.

But if you take the time to brief your temporary caretaker on the special needs of your growing things, you will also impress him with the value that you place upon these plants.

Of course, if you will be gone for a week only, your problem is small. Just soak the garden thoroughly the day before you leave. Mulch around such moisture-lovers as the camellias and azaleas with a thick layer of organic humus (but, then, you should do this, vacation or no vacation) Move hanging baskets and other potted plants into a cool, shaded area where they will be protected if an exceptionally hot spell strikes, and where they can be watered conveniently.

SINKING THE pots in a box of wet humus is added insurance against the drying out of container-grown plants.

Ask your friendly next-door neighbor to keep an eye on your property as a precaution against, not only thieves, but vandals as well.

If you are away more than a week, additional steps may be needed.

A professional gardener, of course, would know just what to do, but to aid the young neighbor draw a rough plot of the garden and circle specific areas that require the most attention. Write down when each area should be watered and for how long. Then he will not have to rely entirely upon his memory.

Again, collect the potted plants in a shaded area where your caretaker can reach them easily with the hose. Specify in writing when and how long to water them.

Be sure that whoever does the job knows that thorough soakings are needed, not just a wetting of the surface.

AND FINALLY, don't fertilize during the two weeks prior to departure. Feeding promotes new growth, and this creates a greater need for water and other attention can an best be provided by you.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

Here is the Marin gardener's checklist for the coming week:

Tuberous begonias are available already in flower at many nurseries, to provide instant color in those bare, not-too-sunny garden spots.

Plant zinnias, salvia, marigolds, petunias, periwinkle, ageratum and other annuals now to prolong your summer-time color show.

✔Something different in the way of statuary for your garden? Why not a flagpole, from which you can fly Old Glory? There is nothing more colorful.

✔If your grass is beginning to look a bit brown despite all your watering, examine the blades of your mower. Dull blades only bend and injure the grass shoots, causing them to brown. If indicated treat your mower to a mid-season sharpening.

✔Keep after snails and slugs with bait or pellets.

Grow Garden In The Window

Garden Page

By MILLICENT TAYLOR

Window-box gardens can add to the beauty of a home, townhouse, summer cottage or even the dwelling of an apartment occupant with a yen to do a spot of gardening.

With the spread of container gardening from Europe to the United States, window-box gardens have made a tremendous comback.

Various models of boxes are on the market, and, there are also brackets for installation.

THE BEST KINDS are of California redwood or cedar. Metal ones can get too hot, and most plastic ones lack drainage holes.

The length should be that of the window sill. In front of a king-sized window, use two, as one long one is too heavy.

There should be a series of drainage holes in the bottom, and the inside depth should be seven or eight inches.

If painted, the box should blend with the trim of the house, although ivory or cream is better than white. Dark colors attract heat. If green, use a tone that doesn't clash with the green of the plants. Natural redwood or cedar is always good.

FOR DRAINAGE, pieces of broken flower pots, convex sides up, can be placed over each hole. Or you can put a one-inch layer of clinkers or pea-size gravel in the box. Cover your drainage material with a layer of sphagnum moss to hold moisture.

The soil needs to be fairly rich.

Recommended is a mixture of three parts good garden soil and/or leaf mold, one part peat moss well-moistened, one-third part sharp builders' sand. Then to a bushel of all this, add a three-inch flower-pot of bonemeal and half a potful of dry manure.

Plants from the nursery are usually preferred to raising plants from seed directly in the box, and can be replenished when needed. If you wish to raise your own (which means no immediate flowers) start them in flats and transplant them later.

SPACE YOUNG plants evenly, seven to eight apart, mindful of their size at maturity. If the plants are in rows, allow three to four inches between the rows and stagger the plants.

If the plants are in groups, have the higher plants in middle or at each end. Also keep to one color for each group. No more than two colors is usually more effective in so small a garden.

In shade, fuchsias, tuberous begonias, calendulas, coleus, begonias, and, for trailers, wandering jew, vinca minor, and ground ivy will all flourish. Many of the plants that enjoy some sunshine, like lobelia and fibrous begonias, will get along also in a shady box.

In full sun or where the plants get a good deal of sun, all the annuals will thrive. Try petunias, nasturtiums, marigolds, zinnias, verbenas, portulacas or other favorites.

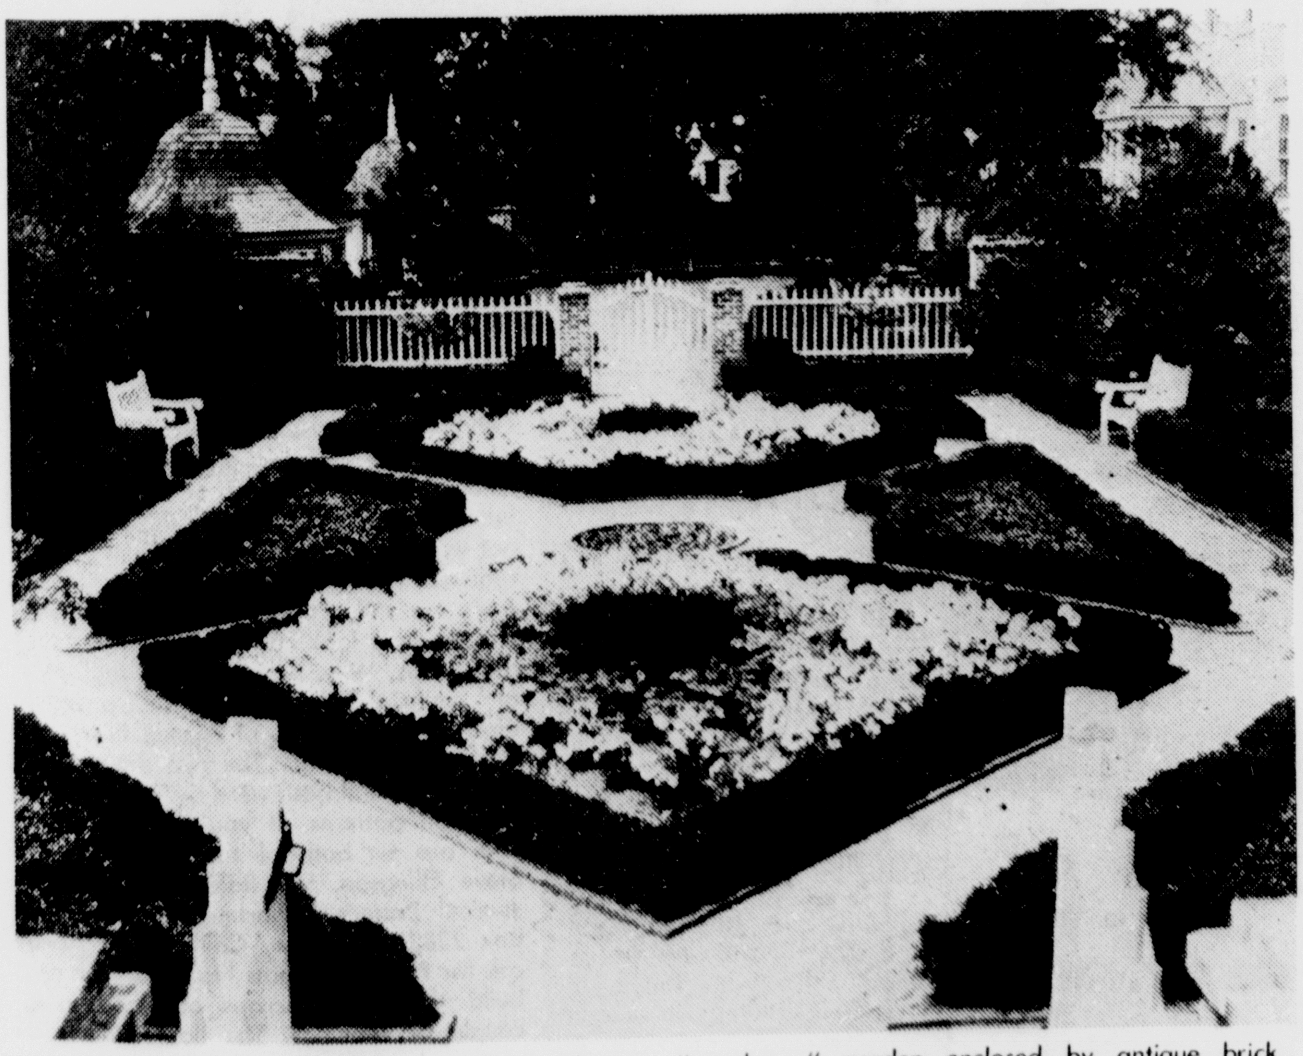
FOR AN AUTUMN box, chrysanthemums are lovely. In winter fill it with evergreens and berry branches.

Planted in a good soil mixture, the plants won't need feeding for about a month. After that, feed them regularly with soluble food. Most will require some daily watering.

Plants in the city should also have their leaves sprayed at intervals because of dust and soot.

1972 The Christian Science Publishing Society

A HARVEST OF HONORS



AMERICA'S MOST HONORED and most photographed garden in 1971 was this one, on the grounds of the Stanly House of the Tryon Palace Restoration Project at New Bern, N.C. The original Stanley House, mutilated by modifications, was moved to a new site near the Tryon Palace, and an authentic Colonial setting, including a formal "townhouse" garden enclosed by antique brick walls and a white picket fence, was re-created. Mrs. Richard Nixon presented an award to its sponsors and designers after the American Assn. of Nurserymen had accorded the garden special recognition in its annual Landscape Awards program.

INSIDE YOUR HOME

If Vista Isn't There, Create One Indoors

By CAROLYN S. MURRAY

The era of the picture window framing a view may be passing.

With more townhouse construction, more builders using the cluster concept of grouping houses, and more highrises on the horizon, the room planned around a handsome window opening seems to be slipping away.

Yet most of us feel lost without something to focus on in our decorating attempts. We'll have to find ways of substituting inside vistas for outside vistas.

A LONG HALL is one opportunity to create such a vista.

The object is to provide one smashing or particularly interesting wall at the far end of any passage. The object could be a tapestry, a big felt banner, importantly framed painting or a hand-painted graphic or mural. Many manufactured wall coverings have the handmade look, yet they are purchasable at paint and wall coverings stores.

Another idea is to create one wall of storage with bookcases and cabinets or music system equipment. Paint the background wall a deep value in keeping with the colors you chose for the overall room. Select an area rug with a strong motif and loosely arrange furniture around this wall-floor feature.

GOOD INTERIOR lighting can help compensate for lack of visual interest in a room. And when the light is used in conjunction with a handsome household plant or indoor tree, the result is particularly effective.

Experiment with light. Small spotlights can be directed at a piece of art or at a sculpture sitting on a pedestal. Shadows can be created on a bare wall by the use of a mobile and projecting light.

Another trick used by young college students is that of flashing color transparencies on the wall from a 35-millimeter projector. The timer is set so you can get a few moments of play from each slide.

Handyman's Pages

Some designers have predicted that in the foreseeable future our wall decorations will, in fact, be color projections rather than framed paintings and wall coverings.

SO FOR THE house without a vista or strong interior feature, there are still possibilities. Area rugs, posters, weavings, all kinds of primitive art contribute to the excitement, or serenity, you wish to create.

Don't just sit there looking at nothing. Save that for your meditations.

WHEN YOU DON'T have a picture window with a view outside, you can compensate at least in part by creating a focal point inside the room. Here a boldly-patterned area rug serves that purpose. And along the wall storage units holding art objects and books make such an interesting background that the window is hardly missed.

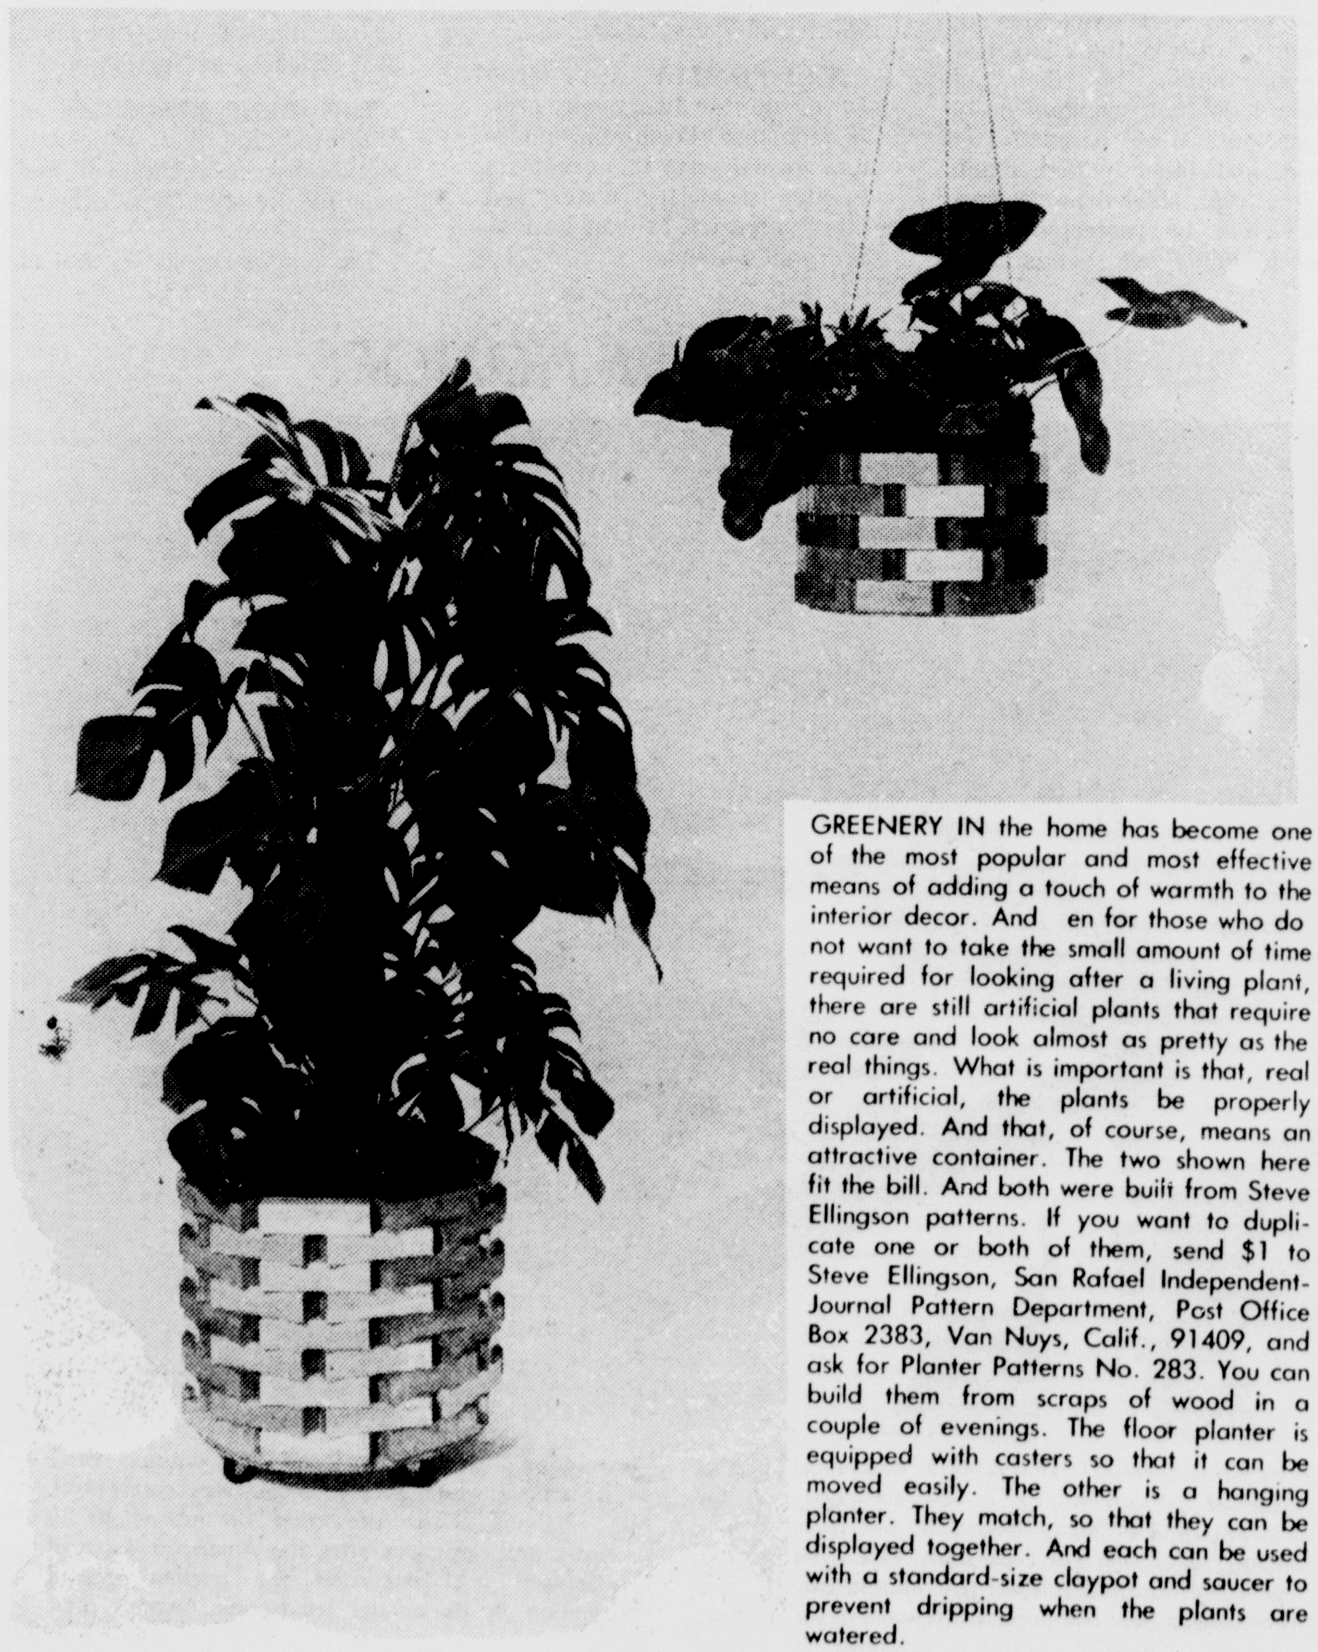
FANCY PLANTS IN THE RIGHT CONTAINERS



GREENERY IN the home has become one of the most popular and most effective means of adding a touch of warmth to the interior decor. And en for those who do not want to take the small amount of time required for looking after a living plant, there are still artificial plants that require no care and look almost as pretty as the real things. What is important is that, real or artificial, the plants be properly displayed. And that, of course, means an attractive container. The two shown here fit the bill. And both were built from Steve Ellingson patterns. If you want to duplicate one or both of them, send $1 to Steve Ellingson, San Rafael Independent-Journal Pattern Department, Post Office Box 2383, Van Nuys, Calif., 91409, and ask for Planter Patterns No. 283. You can build them from scraps of wood in a couple of evenings. The floor planter is equipped with casters so that it can be moved easily. The other is a hanging planter. They match, so that they can be displayed together. And each can be used with a standard-size claypot and saucer to prevent dripping when the plants are watered.

When A Panel Door Is Not A Door

In the bedroom, it's a headboard, and it lifts the decor out of the ordinary by providing a striking decorative accent.

Lifting the bedroom out of the ordinary and gaining tastefully decorated added living space can be accomplished easily and inexpensively, without structural alterations.

The comfort center of any bedroom, of course, is the bed, and it can be a decorative accent as well. Pillow to ceiling headboards of handsome solid wood panel doors lend an appearance far richer than their cost.

GROUPING THE bed and its unique headboard with a desk and built-in storage along one wall might free an area on the other side of the room for a small table, two chairs or a chaise lounge, and a reading lamp.

Stock doors are carried in 30-32 and 36-inch widths. Two of the smaller or middle-size doors side by side can be used for a double bed, two full-width doors for a queen-size, and three of the smallest doors for a king-size bed.

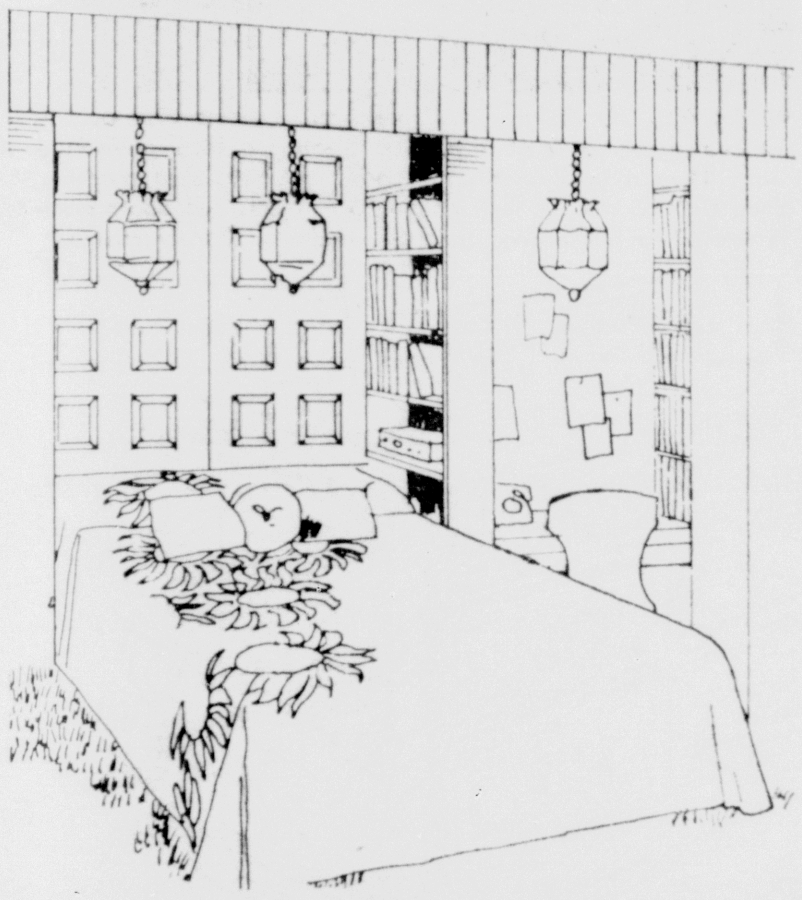
Various styles are offered, such as Mediterranean, traditional, contemporary and colonial, to complement other doors and furnishings of the room. Paint or stain them to suit the decorating scheme.

A SHALLOW alcove is formed around the head of the bed, with bookshelf dividers built out from the wall on either side of the headboard.

Shelves of western pine on the inside of one divider hold books and magazines, a clock radio and possibly a miniature television set.

Along the outside of the other divider, a small desk can be built in as a home office, with shelves on the desk side of this divider.

A valance of one-by-10 or one-by-12-inch pine around the dividers, bed and desk lends a finished look to the room. This could be replaced by an open lattice.



AN AIR OF elegance far beyond the cost added to this bedroom is achieved by using solid panel doors attached directly to the wall as a headboard. The doors are surrounded by shallow divider shelves. An adjacent alcove holds a desk, dressing table or vanity. Hemlock or fir doors come in stock sizes, and it takes three of the smaller size to head up a king-size bed.

Some Blunt Talk About TV

By ALAN BUNCE

NEW YORK, N.Y. — Paul Lester Klein left NBC at the zenith of a powerful and popular reign as vice-president in charge of "audience measurement."

As part of the network inner circle, he helped decide which TV shows stayed on the air and which didn't. "The Beverly Hill-ibillies," for instance, didn't, despite terrific ratings, because Klein thought it wasn't reaching the right people and he had enough clout to get it dropped.

"I loved being vice-president," he admits, with something between irony and ruefulness in his eye. "I was seduced by it. I liked being introduced that way at parties and I hated myself for liking it. But I kept going. Friends of mine would tell me 'without NBC you'd be nothing. It made you what you are today. You're famous and sought-after because of that.' And I believe it. I actually believed it."

ANYONE WHO spends more than a few minutes with Klein will realize he must have had more than subjective reasons for his move. Not because he isn't a subjective person. As a matter of fact, he was known among some people as one of the great shouters of the industry, and what he shouted often turned out to be startingly true.

"I got fired from my job at Doyal Dane Berbach (an advertising agency) because of a fight with my boss," he relates in a voice as soft as the terminal argument must have been loud.

But he has also distinguished himself as a lucid, tough-minded analyst of known facts, a man unlikely to do anything — and that included leaving — without iron-clad reasoning.

"I felt that broadcasting — over-the-air commercial television — was a limited medium," he explains. "Just like radio networking had a limited lifespan. As soon as independent radio stations got another source of programming that people actually paid for, it was over. Records provided star-value programming for no money. They were simple plugged on the air and sold directly to the public."

"I KEPT TELLING this to NBC," he recalls, "and I think they agreed with me, but I guess there was not much they could do about it."

His solution to this phase of future shock is Computer Television Inc., a five-man operation that some day may allow each member of a potentially vast cable-TV audience to choose programs individually and pay for them.

"All the RCAs and CBSs are going to be in this business," Klein asserts with a touch of resignation, "and they'll do it exactly as I've outlined it. There may still be a Computer Television Inc., and there may not.

"For me, getting rich isn't part of the ball game. I just wanted to have my own company without too much suffering. It's much slower than I thought. It's very frustrating."

"COMMERCIAL television in the United States is the best television in the world," he states matter-of-factly. "Even in the worst sections the number of choices is as good as in Britain, maybe better.

"But even so, once you've educated somebody by giving

A MODERN harvesting machine, barely visible in the foreground, and a primitive ox-cart highlight contrasts in the changing Chilean economy on the "ABC News Inquiry" special, "Chile: Experiment in Red," to be colorcast Monday at 8 p.m. on Channel 7.

A ROLLICKING rendition of "There Is Nothing Like a Dame" is ripped off by Yaphet Kotto, left, and Ryan O'Neal as one of the highlights of "Salute to a Cockeyed Optimist: Oscar Hammerstein II," the hour-long musical special to be repeated Monday at 10 p.m. on Channels 5 and 10.

The Man Who Killed Hillbillies

him these choices, once you've made a car that goes 30 miles per hour and it's faster than anything in the world up to that point, there's still a hunger to go 40, 50, 100 — 2,000. And that's how it is with video. Once you've given somebody tremendous choice and made them visually oriented, they hunger for more. They don't know it, but just put it in front of them and see how much they eat.

"Advertising can support the present system and no other. If the number of channels proliferated so people could receive 10, 12, 13 channels simultaneously, each station would get an audience so small the advertiser couldn't pay it back for the cost of the video product.

"I THINK network television will survive in the area where it's strongest — over-the-air, time oriented programs like the Super Bowl. That's where pay TV is the weakest. You never heard me talk about sports on pay-TV. I don't believe in any of that junk.

"But the network is a dinosaur when it comes to taped or filmed entertainment. Who wants to send filmed stuff over all those webs of lines. It doesn't have to appear in my home at the same time as somebody else's home. There's no reason for it anymore. News and sports and Johnny Carson-type shows, that's the backbone of network television.

"As long as everything stays the same, as long as there are three networks, a weak Public Broadcasting Service, independents the way they are, and no competition, this system could survive.

"EVEN AS IT it, it gets weaker and weaker. You have more and more repeats. When I started at NBC the episodes that began in September were repeated in June. Then it was March or the last week in February in many cases. In the case of made-for-TV movies, they have only 17 originals during a 52-week season on a network."

Klein's conversation crackles with figures and logic as he scans the broadcasting scene.

"My ideas about cable are not what everyone else is talking about," he goes on. "I don't think expanding choice has anything to do with what cable is good for. My idea is a huge player that could handle 80 tapes. Right now movies are the only video product of quality around — anything from 'The French Connection' to 'The Bicycle Thief.'

"ANY OF THEM could be chosen by the viewer at home by using a cable computer. But it can't be done at the time requested. Let's say home 001 — your home — wants program 1231. The computer is constantly scanning the homes and picks that request up and holds it.

"On the half hour it delivers that program to your home and to everyone else who has requested it between say 8 and 8:30 p.m. You con't have to set your dials or anything. It's remotely tuned. At 8:11 you request the program. You then go back to watch whatever over-the-air program you want.

"You can have two systems for financing it. One is where the program contains advertising and the advertiser is then billed when you have seen the show — no ratings or anything, it's all guaranteed. On the other hand you can have programs with no commercials and you yourself are billed for receiving it. I think the future of video publishing is in buying your own product."

I COULDN'T resist asking a man who had cut a wide swath as a ratings expert how he felt about the current flap over "The Dick Cavett Show" on ABC. Its Nielsen ratings are low and it may be dropped. Yet people constantly praise it. Aren't the Nielsen ratings biased against "intellectual" shows like his?

"Their samples are fantastically well-drawn," Klein asserts. "There is a bias in them but that bias operates in favor of Dick Cavett — not against him.

"The people who take Nielsen machines into their homes — the ones that keep track of program viewing — do so because they want to improve television in some cases, and would be more likely to view Dick Cavett. I felt everyone I knew used to watch the old 'That Was the Week That Was' show, yet its ratings were low and some said the numbers were wrong. Then studies showed they were actually overstated. Later the three networks once did a huge study and it indicated people who respond to ratings studies tend to favor the Dick Cavett kind of program and not 'The Price Is Right.'

"THAT'S NOT the problem. You have to go beyond that. Circulation per se is an irrelevant measure. You just don't use it straight out. If you did, the New York Times would be out of business and the Daily Mirror would have been the big paper in New York. It had twice the circulation of the New York Times when it went out of business.

"In network TV you're dealing in such broad numbers that people who get the high-rated programs — the movies and Johnny Carson — can sell that to advertisers and cut out Dick Cavett. If Cavett had the numbers he has now in another medium, he'd be a huge success."

. "Occasionally for a month or so people get really disgusted and 'sets in use' are lower. But it goes in waves, "he says."Sometimes they'll watch anything. Other times, they'll exercise restraint. But not everyone does it at once. In general people tend to watch. They get something from the medium. It's very satisfactory one."

DISAPPOINTMENTS

Each of us is vulnerable
To many disappointments.
There are no ways or conditions
To foresee or avoid them,
Never knowing when or how
They will arise unexpectedly.

The stronger we are,
The more casual we become,
And with faith and forbearance
We solve all the challenges
The best way we know how,
Every moment, day by day.

ONLY PEOPLE

In a little while, the scientists say,
There will be only people on earth,
Wildlife having finished its day
Upon the global girth.
Here is the stark and tragic reason:
Predacious man, in and out of season,
Has slaughtered deer and buffalo,
Tiger and fox, for fur and game,
And species of every other name.
With animals, the birds will go,
Killed for food or feathery show.
Imagine a world when the birds are gone,
And no more carol up the dawn,
Sing in trees or hop on the lawn:
When no more antelope, gazelle
And antlered buck bound on the hills,
Nor rabbits rustle in a dell,
Nor lumbering bear come down to rills.
With loss of fur-and-feather creatures,
There may fall across the earth
Appalling silence and strange dearth,
As of a face deprived of features.

NOVATO — LORI PETRI

"ANT - THOLOGY"

I am beseiged by black ants
Appearing more like monsters,
As I view them from a prone position;
Antennae waving like
Darkened wheat in a summer wind,
Eyes that stare
Stare, as if in a state of hypnotism,
Eyes that are blue-black
Like saran wrap sacks
Filled with indigo ink,
And taut as the skin on a drum.
Their legs move in unison
(I am reminded of an Army troop)
The weight of the bread crumbs
On their cilia covered backs,
Does not slow their pace.
And though they are two feet away,
To them it is two miles,
So I may rest for a while,
But then I must move
So as not to impede
Their long trek home.

Inside A Brown Paper Bag — An Airplane That Really Soars

By JOHN SUNIER

Some new releases on the RCA Victor labels:

JEFFERSON AIRPLANE: "Bark" — Grunt Records 1011:

This must be the first LP with an outer jacket made from a brown paper bag. It includes lots of zany tips on what to do with the bag, and inside is an illustration of a fish wrapped in paper plus complete lyrics.

Grace Slick's lyric-writing, as well as delivery, reaches new heights of achievement. "Crazy Miranda" and "Never Argue with a German If You're Tired" are among the best. The instrumental "Wild Turkey," really soars, and my personal favorite was the psychologically-sound "You're Pretty as You Feel."

I was getting a bit tired of the Airplane doing the same thing over and over, but this one restores my interest.

HOT TUNA — RCA LSP-4550:

The only place there is anything approaching an album title is on the spine, where it says "First Pull Up, Then Pull Down." Since there doesn't appear to be anything there to pull any direction, that must be the album title!

Anyway, Jack Casady and Jorma Kaukonen from the Jefferson Airplane join with fiddler Papa John Creach and a drummer and harmonica-player to create a freer, more acoustic and down-home-sounding music than the Airplane provides. This is a bouncy, happy album highlighted by some amazing fiddle-playing on "Keep Your Lamps Trimmed and Burning" and other tracks.

PAUL KANTNER and The Jefferson Starship: "Blows Against the Empire" — RCA LSP-4448:

More Airplane-connected rock, this time centered around a theme of plans and directives to highjack the first inter-stellar spaceship with the ostensible purpose of starting a new civilization with a select group of freaks on another planet. Grace Slick is part of the ensemble, as well as Jerry Garcia and Crosby and Nash.

The music is more like the standard Airplane than Hot Tuna, and the message of the lyrics is driven a bit too hard for my taste, but the LP does have some very trippy moments.

NINA SIMONE: "Here Comes the Sun" — RCA LSP-4536:

What a compelling communication Nina Simone has with her listeners. Every part of her being is directed toward getting her message across in music, and she seldom fails.

Though a lot is lost in the reduction to mere audio, this LP is so far above most female vocalists' efforts it's ridiculous. Though tunes like "Mr. Bojangles," "Just Like a Woman," and "My Way" may not be Miss Simone's by way of authorship, she makes them her own in performance.

The orchestral backing, directed by Harold Wheeler, is just right.

SIEGEL-SCHWALL Band — Wooden Nickel Records WNS-1002.

This group from Chicago gained many fans when they appeared in San Francisco with Ozawa and the Symphony. The work for blues band and symphony they played then is among the first works scheduled for taping on the symphony's brand new recording contract with DGG.

But back to this album:

It's a fine, gutsy blues trip with Corky Siegel's great harp playing. (That's harp as in harmonica, not harp as in harp, all you classical buffs.) "Corrina" is one of the most energetic, but the other six tracks never let down either.
